

THIS WEEK
—In Washington
With Clinton Davidson

Top government farm officials from five Free World nations met recently in Washington for two days, then left with no more than a brief note in the press that they had been there.

Those who know what was discussed think that what they began here could very well have a greater bearing on the future peace of the world than anything to be accomplished at the Summit Conference in Geneva.

A start was made toward use of the tremendous Free World reserve of food to counter Russian propaganda among the uncommitted nations of the world. The countries participating in the meeting were the U. S., France, Canada, Australia and Argentina.

The conference was the first step in the "food for peace" proposal advanced early this year by President Eisenhower in a special message to Congress. Officials described it as "largely exploratory." Bread on the Waters Agreement was reached, tentatively, on a program for sharing the surpluses of wheat held by the five nations with the more than half a billion people in the world who go to bed hungry every night.

The five agricultural ministers took home, for approval of their governments, proposals that could make available almost immediately some two billion bushels of wheat for distribution to nations in short supply of food.

It was agreed to encourage underdeveloped nations to set up their own national food reserves, using wheat received from the five exporting nations.

Following the example already set by the U. S., the four other countries will consider making wheat available anywhere in the Free World in exchange for the currency of the receiving nation.

Two Purposes
The food surplus producing nations have two primary objectives in undertaking a food for peace program. They want to combat communism in the nations where hunger makes it easy for the Reds to spread their propaganda.

Too, they want to turn food surpluses from a financial burden into an asset for peace, and as the preliminary to long-time customers for our farms and factories.

Four of the five nations represented at the meeting have the ability to greatly expand their food production. France is the exception. Although wheat currently is in the greatest surplus, many other foods also are available.

The eventual goal of the food for peace program is to keep farmers in the Free World fully and profitably employed while, at the same time, making food available to peoples of the underdeveloped nations under long-term agreements.

The reasoning is that communism cannot flourish in nations that are well fed and clothed. This is a long-range goal whose success or failure could mean the difference between war and peace without fear of hunger.

With snap beans or summer squash, cook a tablespoon or two of minced onion, green pepper, or parsley.

Cook a few mint leaves with peas. Put a small pinch of an herb or spice in the water when you cook lima beans.

But go easy with these seasonings — their pungency easily overshadows the delicate flavors of vegetables.

Point up the flavor of cooked vegetables by seasoning with flavorful fats such as meat drippings, butter, margarine, or salad oil with lemon juice, horseradish, or garlic added. If you use bacon drippings, add bits of crisply fried bacon, especially with spinach or other greens.

The World's Only True Wild Horse
Going The Way Of The Whooping Crain

The only true wild horse — the Mongolian or Przewalski — is going the way of the whooping crane. Zoologists believe that the 50 or so animals in zoos around the world now outnumber those roaming the old central-Asian homeland. It is even suspected that small herds in the wilderness may have interbred with domestic horses and no longer exist in pure form.

To save the species from extinction, the director of the Zoological Gardens at Prague, Czechoslovakia, has recently circulated questionnaires to all known owners of Przewalskies, asking for detailed records on their history and characteristics. The data will provide pedigrees that will be helpful in breeding.

The Przewalski Wild horse was named for a Russian explorer who came on the animals while traveling in Mongolia and northern Tibet during the 1870's, says the National Geographic Society.

Colonel Nicholas M. Przewalski also spelled 'Prejevalsky) was a czarist army officer whose ardent interest in natural history had led him to apply for posts in eastern Siberia.

In 1870 he obtained permission to conduct an expedition across inner Asia for the Russian Geographical Society. Among the thousands of specimens of mammals, birds, reptiles, and fishes he collected were the skull and skin of a strange, small horse.

In an adventure-filled book published in 1876, Colonel Przewalski reported large herds of the horses running wild on the plains of Tsaidam and beyond in western Mongolia. They were quite shy, he said, and when frightened would continue a flight for days.

Mongol tribesmen told the explorer that although they hunted wild camels of northwest Tsaidam for their delicate flesh, the horses were too swift and alert for the chase.

The Przewalski Wild Horse is much smaller than the domestic animal. It is generally yellowish or light reddish-brown in color, with a distinctive dark streak along its back. Its head is large, the muzzle prominent. Its tail is long and flowing, and its short mane is as stiff as a clothes brush.

A closely related wild horse, now extinct, was the Tarpan. So called from its Tatar roving grounds, this creature had a drab-gray color and less noticeable streak.

Both horses carried on a remarkably organized way of life. The herds, numbering from several hundred to perhaps a thousand, were set up like armies. At the head of each galloped a sultan-stallion, leader in battle and lord of any mare of his choice.

"Lieutenants" commanded the lower ranks, while restive young stallions served as sentries. They trotted along on the outskirts of the herds, ready to neigh a piercing warning at the first sign of danger.

In a fascinating experiment in back-breeding, the German zoologist brothers, Lutz and Heinz Heck, have succeeded in physically re-creating the extinct Tarpan.

By crossing selected domestic mares of Scandinavian stock with wild Mongolian stallions, they have developed typical wild forest horses of primeval times. Small and mouse gray, the animals have the bushy mane, flowing tail, and characteristic streak of their ancient ancestors.

A little vinegar and sugar heated together makes a good dressing for snap beans or cabbage, with or without a few tablespoons of cream.

VEGETABLES IN SAUCE — For a flavor change, serve boiled vegetables in a sauce. Combine hot vegetables and hot sauce lightly just before serving, allowing about 1 cup of sauce for 4 servings of vegetable. For full vegetable flavor, use the vegetable cooking liquid in the sauce.

Mock Hollandaise Sauce: Make medium white sauce. Beat 2 egg yolks; stir about 1/4 cup of the hot sauce into them and pour back into the rest of the sauce. Add 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and stir and cook over hot water about a minute. Remove from heat and stir in 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Serve at once. Excellent for asparagus and broccoli.

Herb Sauce: Use proportions of fat and flour for medium or thin white sauce. Cook 2 teaspoons finely chopped chives and 2 teaspoons finely chopped parsley in the fat. Add a pinch of marjoram or thyme to the flour before blending it into the fat. Good with peas and lima beans.

Mustard Sauce: Stir 2 teaspoons prepared mustard into medium or thin white sauce after cooking. Especially good with snap beans, greens, and cabbage.
