

THIS WEEK
—In Washington
With Clinton Davidson

President Eisenhower is being urged to call a "summit conference" of farm leaders this fall in a dramatic effort to ease tensions between Congress and Agriculture Secretary Ezra Benson over farm legislation.

It is hoped that such a conference at the White House, with the President presiding, could result in an easing of the "Coldwar" that blocked all efforts this year to develop new and useful farm legislation.

There was unanimous agreement at the start of this year that new farm laws ranked just back of national defense on the list of "must" legislation for this session of Congress. Mr. Eisenhower emphasized that in his January farm message to Congress.

A farm situation that was growing steadily worse, both from the standpoint of skyrocketing costs and growing surpluses, was conclusive proof that both Congress and the Administration had a responsibility to change the farm laws. There was no disagreement on that.

Hot Words, No Thaw

President Eisenhower told Congress, in general terms, the kind of a farm bill he wanted. Secretary Benson spelled that out in specific language a few days later in testimony before the congressional agriculture committees.

The Secretary was rebuffed by hot words and his proposal was coldshouldered by both Democratic and Republican members of Congress. Mr. Benson, stung by the criticism of his proposal, sat back and waited to see what Congress would come up with. Some of his harsher critics charged that he sulked, but this Mr. Benson flatly denied.

GARDEN TIME

Have you ever used grape leaves in the home processing of cucumber pickles? If you have, do you know why you used them? Better color? Firmness? Taste? Or was the recipe handed down from grandmothers or great-grandmothers?

If you have used this method it would be of considerable interest to hear from you because grape leaves may supply the answer to one spoilable problem which has caused tremendous losses in the growing commercial pickling industry.

The problem is concerned with softening of cucumbers during brine fermentation and the storage of salt back. Behind these losses are enzymes-chemical compounds produced by living cells which are essential for biological processes. It was discovered that these enzymes were introduced into the curing brine vat on withering, milky flowers still attached to the cucumbers at harvest time. Years of research have gone into the discovery of a non-poisonous substance, or inhibitor, which would prevent this enzyme action. And this is where grape leaves come into the picture.

Recent studies have indicated that grape leaves contain a natural inhibitor against the enzymes which cause softening of the cucumbers. It was further discovered that the Scuppernon variety, of the Muscadine family, a native American variety which originated in Tyrrell County, yielded the highest concentration of the enzyme inhibitor.

It is obvious that the addition of large quantities of grape leaves to commercial cucumber vats would be impractical. However, it may be that the inhibitor can be further identified and isolated so that higher concentrations could be easily obtained by synthetic methods. If this can be done it would prove to be of great value to the pickling industry and other industries where enzyme control is desirable.

And so, time marches on and the importance of research is again brought into sharp focus.

Soil Conservation NEWS

Last Wednesday, 26 August, in Rapid City, South Dakota, a new fourcent postage stamp was placed on sale for the first time. The same stamp went on sale at post offices all over the United States the next day. This stamp was the world's first SOIL CONSERVATION stamp. Its issuance is a dramatic recognition by a grateful nation that American farmers and ranchers, and their government, are hard at work to improve, for the benefit of us all, our most valuable natural resource, the soil.

The stamp portrays the beauty as well as the bounty that modern conservation farming brings to rural living. The city skyline on the horizon signifies at the same time that dwellers of skyscrapers, also have a stake in Soil Conservation. The stamp will be the symbol of assurance that a plentiful supply of food and other products of the lands will continue to flow to the seven-eighths of our people who live in towns and cities.

The stamp is a tribute to the countless farmers and ranchers who are demonstrating good soil stewardship. It is a salute to the locally organized soil conservation districts, and to the scientists, technicians, and other agricultural workers of the state and federal government who lend assistance. Its design contains a reminder that soil conservation is an orderly combination of practices and land use that carefully relate water, grass, trees, livestock, wildlife, and other crops of the land.

Local observances noting the issue of this three-color, four-cent stamp were sponsored in thousands of cities and communities by the Soil Conservation Society of America, Soil Conservation Districts, by the Soil Conservation Service, and by other agencies of the Department of Agriculture, and by other conservation-minded groups.

The observances combined pride of accomplishment in soil conservation with serious acceptance of the big job still to be done. To complete and maintain a soil conservation program that will insure the wisest and best use of the vital national resource for all time—that is the challenge the first soil conservation stamp lays before all citizens. It is fitting that this stamp zens of our nation.

The three hundred and forty six farmers of Cherokee County who have become cooperators with the Cherokee County Soil Conservation District are among those individuals to whom this stamp pays tribute.

It is fitting that this stamp brings to the attention of the general public the vital importance of our soil. Everything which we possess or can hope to possess is either directly or indirectly dependent on the soil. Our very existence would be impossible but for the soil which we often treat so lightly and poorly. The farmer is no more dependent on the soil than is the business executive in an office on the top floor of the Empire State Building, who probably has never had his bare feet in contact with the bare ground.

This 18 day of August, 1959.
