Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Benson returned recently from a first-hand survey of farming and farm living conditions inside Russia. His authoritative comments and comparisons with American agriculture probably are the most reliable that are available from behind the Iron Curtain.

The Secretary traveled through arming areas, stopping often to talk with Russian farm people. He also talked with Russian agricultural officials. From his observations we get a good comparison between U. S. and USSR farming.

"You have read," he said, "that the Soviet Union has made, and is making, great strides toward a more efficient agriculture. This is true.

"Yet, according to Soviet sources some 50 million persons were working in agriculture in 1956-43 per cent of their total labor force. The Soviet Union, in other words, has several times as many people actively engaged in agriculture as we have, yet our total production exceeds theirs by a wide margin."

Forty Years Behind Khrushchev has boasted from time to time that Soviet agricultural production will soon equal, and then surpass, that of the United States. Russian farm output per worker is about equal to that of the average American farmer at the time of World War I, and it is only about one-third the current U. S. output per worker.

Consider that in this country we are attempting to restrain farm production, while in Russia there is a great effort to expand production, and you see that the Russians have a long, long way to go to catch up with us.

"There is," Benson noted, "a big gap between their productivity and ours—a still wider gap between their marketing and ours—and a tremendous chasm between their farm standards of living and ours. "Compared with a typical American farm, life on a Soviet farm is almost primitive. They have about one million tractors, all owned by the State. We have nearly five million, owned by individuals.

HAND LABOR VS. POWER "Few Soviet farms have electricity, compared with 96 per cent of ours, and with electricity in the U. S. have come running water, radios, television, refrigerators, deep freezers, vacuum cleaners and a whole multitude of labor-saving devices unknown on the average Russian farm.

"Many families on Soviet farms live in wooden cabins, even mud huts. They get to town about as often as farmers in this country used to 60 or 75 years ago.

"Our farm families drive modern cars on hard-surface highways. The Soviet farm family rides in horse-drawn carts over roads to match. We have more telephones on farms in this country than can be found in all of Russia, city and farm combined.

"After a first hand look at agriculture under contrasting forms of government and in three Communist countries," Benson said, "I'm all the more convinced of the superiority of our agricultural system of privately owned family farms, the profit motive, competitive markets, and freedom for the farmer to decide what he wants to grow and market.

"How fortunate we are to live in this land, how grateful we should be, and how determined to keep our country free and strong."

Townson Lumber Company Receives Award

Robert B. Horning, manager of the Charlotte Branch Office of Small Business Administration, announced that during the last reporting period, small business firms in North Carolina received $931,782 in government contracts.

Among North Carolina businesses receiving awards are: W. D. Townson Lumber Co. of Murphy for $302,303 (pallets).

These awards were made as a result of SBA's co-operative set-aside program with government purchasing agencies. Under this program SBA representatives, in co-operation with purchasing officers of civilian and defense agencies, reserve proposed contracts for exclusive competitive award to small business firms.

Caribou are the chief source of livelihood for Alaska's nomadic Eskimos. The animals furnish meat for food, horn for implements, and hides for tents, rope and clothing.

For the third time since he took office, President Eisenhower on Sept. 22 signed a bill with press and newsreel cameras covering the event. This one was the measure that allowed the Treasury to raise interest rates on E and H bonds bought since June 1, 1959, to 3 1/2 per cent.

Soil Conservation NEWS By JOHN SMITH

Supervisors of the Cherokee County Soil Conservation District held their regular meeting last Tuesday afternoon. Included in the business which they discussed was "The Story of the Land", a comic book-style pamphlet which tells the story of soil erosion and soil conservation. This pamphlet will be placed in the seventh grade classes of all the schools in Cherokee County by the District Supervisors in the near future.

Expense of these pamphlets is being paid by a group of merchants and business men of Cherokee who are interested in seeing the teenage students of the county become acquainted with the advantages of good soil conservation methods.

This same booklet was placed in the class rooms of all schools in the county last year, and many favorable comments from both teachers and students have been received.

Another item of business discussed at the meeting was the forthcoming election of a supervisor to replace Claude Patterson whose term expires in December. Due to other commitments, Claude has decided that he cannot run for reelection. Two good conservation farmers have been selected to run for the office. They are Don Taylor and Stanley Wood, both of the Suit section. The election will be held from the 7th to the 12th of December at points throughout the county. All farmers and citizens who are interested in seeing good soil conservation in Cherokee County should exercise their privilege to vote for one of these men to represent them on this important and powerful agricultural committee in Cherokee County. The list of polling places will appear in the next edition of the Cherokee Scout. Polling places are distributed so that no person will have to go far from home in order to vote for the candidate of their choice.

Under the act of Congress recently signed by the President, all Series E Savings Bonds may now be held an additional 10 years beyond their next maturity date at increased rates of interest. It pays to hold them.

Series E and H Savings Bonds issued since June 1, 1959, yield over 2 1/2 per cent for the first year and a half; then 4 per cent to maturity.

U. S. Savings Bonds, Series E for growth, Series H for income, now yield 3 1/2 per cent on all issued since June 1, 1959. Both principal and interest are guaranteed by the United States Treasury and they do not fluctuate with the market.

Meo women of Indochina dislike paper money, but dole on silver coins. They keep their "bank accounts" in chains strung around their necks.

Last year according to Godfrey, several producers in the State had their 1959 allotments reduced for failure to return marketing cards and other violations. These few farmers, compared with the 159,400 tobacco farmers in the state, represent a very small percentage. However, failure to return these cards definitely hurts the farmers whose allotments are reduced and it also slows up the work in the ASC county office considerably.

Godfrey says that regulations provide that the producer must return each tobacco marketing card issued for the farm to the county office within thirty days after the close of the markets in the general locality. Many farmers, he said put off returning their tobacco marketing cards, until it is too late.

The new interest rates on Series E and H Savings Bonds improve the yield on old bonds as well as on "new" ones bought since June 1, 1959.

ASC NEWS

Tobacco farmers are required by program regulations to return their marketing cards to the local ASC county office at the close of the marketing season. H. D. Godfrey, State Administrative Officer for Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation State Committee, predicts that again this year some farmers will neglect to return their marketing card and will have their 1960 allotment reduced because of their neglect.
