Cheese Spread Christmas Tree

For holiday refreshments that are as bright and merry as the season itself, create an edible Christmas tree from a well-seasoned cheese spread and offer it to guests with a selection of breads and crackers and a choice of ale and beer—beverages which are light, refreshing and kind to calorie-counters.

This recipe makes a tree approximately 12 inches high and impressive enough to feature as the centerpiece for a snack buffet or the single food to serve at a holiday open house. Of course, if you want to be dramatic and the party is for a crowd, start with a larger paper or cardboard base and double or triple the cheese mixture.

- Edible Christmas Tree
- 1 cup (1/2 pound) butter or margarine
 - 1/4 cup beer
 - 1/2 pound cream cheese with chives
 - 1/2 pound Roquefort cheese
 - 1/2 cup beer
 - 1/2 teaspoon Tabasco
 - 1/2 teaspoon dry mustard
- Have butter and cheese at room temperature. Combine all ingredients in mixing bowl and beat until well-blended. Make a cone out of several thicknesses of 8 1/2 x 14-inch paper or of lightweight cardboard; secure with cellophane tape. Cover cone with cellophane paper. Set cone firmly on a sherbet glass. Frost paper cone generously with the cheese mixture; decorate with bits of pimiento, stuffed olives, ripe olives, gherkins and capers. Serve with small slices of salty rye, a selection of cranberry and ale and beer. Yield: 4 1/2 cups spread.

One-Stop Shopping Still Has Not Reached Japan

By PHYLLIS BABB
 We are so busy hustling and bustling through our daily chores that I doubt if many of us ever stop and think how really easy our lives are made for us.

For instance, do we appreciate such simple things as one-stop shopping in our modern grocery stores?

In Japan there are no such places that could be compared with grocery stores as we know them. There is a separate shop for vegetables, meat, fish etc.

The only exceptions to this rule are found in Tokyo. There, in the large department stores, the basements are devoted entirely to foods. These basement markets are the closest thing to our grocery stores.

As most Japanese housewives have only a small ice-box, shopping must be done daily. Refrigerators are only now coming into existence and only the very rich can afford them.

So once a day the Japanese women swarm to the neighboring stores.

merger sells everything from eels to shrimp (so big that three will suffice even the most ravenous appetite. The fish monger has few spare moments as he must be sure that all of the wooden trays, in which the fish are kept, are adequately supplied with ice chunks. In his summertime, you can appreciate what a job this would be.

The local butcher carries all of the other meats that we know. That is, beef, lamb, chicken and pork.

Then there is still another shop that does quite a business. It is known as the Sake House. Here Sake wine or beer may be purchased. I was very much surprised to learn that this is also the store which carries soy sauce, the liquid seasoning that is a "must" on every table in Japan.

None of these stores supply paper bags for your convenience. Every woman in Japan undoubtedly has her own shopping bag which she must take along each time she goes shopping.

All of the stores that I have mentioned are open air type markets.
