Soil Conservation NEWS

By JOHN SMITH

A farmer recently asked me what he should feed the fish in his farm pond to make them grow. He then told me that he had been buying bread at the grocery store for the fish. It seems that he has been feeding the fish six to eight loaves of bread a day for some time now. This would make his fish food bill more than a dollar a day. Fish do like bread and will eat it any time they can get it, but it does not furnish enough nourishment to make them grow very rapidly.

In a pond that is properly stocked and adequately fertilized, fish will grow well without any supplemental feeding. The purpose of the fertilizer is to stimulate the growth of very small plants and animals which are already present in water. The bream eat large quantities of these microscopic plants and animals which are high in protein. This food causes the bream to grow rapidly and to reproduce large numbers of bream fingerlings. The bass in turn eat the bream fingerlings and they grow rapidly.

Fertilization of your pond should start in early April and should be continued throughout warm weather up until the middle of October. When the weather cools down, there is no advantage in fertilizing the pond until warm weather returns the next spring.

A couple of dollars worth of fertilizer applied at three to six week intervals will produce much more growth than a dollars worth of bread every day.

The hardest point to get across to pond owners is that the pond should be fished regularly and heavily. After both species of fish have spawned one time, no fish which is hooked should be put back in the pond. If a fish which is too small to eat is hooked, feed it to the cat, or put it in the stream below the dam. If the little fish are put back in the pond, it won't be long until there won't be anything but little ones in the pond. It is only by removing fish that the remaining fish are given the chance to grow.

ASC NEWS

A total of 60,660 acres are scheduled to be set to forest trees in this State under ASC's two conservation programs. According to Zeno O. Ratcliff, Jr., Chairman of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation State Committee, 46,660 acres are scheduled to be planted under the 1960 Soil Bank Conservation Reserve Program, and requests have been submitted to ASC county offices which would place an additional 14,000 acres of forest seedlings under the 1959 Agricultural Conservation Program.

At the required rate of 1,000 seedlings per acre this would require 60,660,000 seedlings. According to Ratcliff, the State Forestry Department now has on hand an ample supply of seedlings, however farmers will need to place their orders promptly if the planting is to be accomplished this season. There are thousands and thouands of acres of marginal land in North Carolina which, according to Ratcliff, should be planted to trees. Most of this land, he said, is not suitable for any other use. Every acre of trees planted on this marginal land increases our overall conservation progress just that much.

ASC's conservation program can be of a definite benefit not only to Tarheel farmers, but to the Tarheel lumber industry and to persons who will be buying lumber for home construction, insuring that we will have an adequate supply of timber to meet our future needs—a supply which will be sufficient to keep lumber prices at reasonable levels. The Agricultural Conservation Program provides some incentive for farmers to undertake important conservation practices such as tree planting, where this conservation would not otherwise be accomplished.

Order blanks for tree seedlings may be obtained at ASC county offices, as well as from other agricultural agencies. "Farmers should place their orders early to avoid the rush and to avoid a possible shortage of certain varieties," Ratcliff said.
