CONGRATULATIONS!

The eight persons listed below are the winners of the green stamp contest. A very large number of letters were received and they all show a deep concern for the future of our nation. None of the prize winners is personally known to me, but I would be happy to make their acquaintance. As announced previously, the eight letters will be available to other Congressional candidates.

GEORGIA LEGISLATURE

1960: the year of decision

Whatever happens—or doesn't happen during the 1960 Georgia General Assembly which convenes January 11—will be decisive!

One of the major issues will be the big segregation question which will concern the Atlanta Board of Education's desegregation plan for city schools. Under federal court order to end racial discrimination in the schools, the Atlanta board has devised a plan contingent on Georgia legislative approval before going into effect. The plan will be submitted to the legislature.

What will the legislature do, in face of Gov. Ernest Vandiver's opposition to any weakening of the state's segregation laws and in view of the solid anti-integration stand of this and past legislatures? This issue is of great import.

Keep up with what will happen on the spot with The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution. Their reporters will be on the scene to bring you the fast-breaking news as it happens.

Grounds Make Home More Attractive

By M. E. GARDNER
What makes a home attractive? The house might be considered and will depend upon the combined efforts of the owner, architect and builder. Then we would have a look at the general surroundings in relation to the site. Trees, shrubs, flowers and borders would come into the picture and finally, the lawn.

I expect that if we observe closely and try to select a common denominator for evaluating the attractiveness of a home, we would settle on the lawn. It might be a small plot in front of a small and simple cottage, or an expensive "welcome mat" leading to a large estate. If it is rough, patchy or has brown spots, it very materially detracts from the landscape picture no matter how much attention has been given to trees, flowers and shrubs.

The best time to establish a lawn is in the early fall—about September in the mountains and October and the early part of November in eastern Carolina. There are several reasons for this. The days are getting cooler and shortening. Rainfall is more likely to be better distributed. The chances are good for having the lawn established before real bad weather comes. Even then such grasses as fescue and bluegrass will sprout and grow when the ground is not frozen.

Perhaps the greatest advantage of fall planting is getting ahead of the annual weeds, which will not sprout until spring. The competition of young grass seedlings with annual weeds in spring seeded lawns is frequently the determining factor. The weeds usually win. You may be wondering by now why I am recommending fall seeding and giving suggestions at this time of the year. The reason is that I have a hunch that more than 50 per cent of the lawns are spring seeded. I am referring to permanent lawns and not to winter lawns seeded, or over seeded, with Italian rye grass. I will continue next time with seed bed preparation.

CATHOLIC INFORMATION

Separation of Church and State

By Rev. Joseph Dean

"Look" Magazine carried a feature article in the recent February 18th issue, giving the Catholic position against union of church and state.

Catholics are opposed to such an arrangement after the sad experiences of history in centuries past. The article goes on to show that a majority of Catholics in an area does not mean a union of church and state. Most countries today with a Catholic majority do have separation of church and state.

In Spain, a dictatorship is running the government, and Catholics are finding their religious freedom limited more and more. But in general, countries with Catholic majorities are following the pattern of separation of church and state.

Pope Pius XII clarified the situation in 1954 when he spoke about non-Catholics living in areas with Catholic majorities. He stated that repression of opposition or error must be subordinated to higher norms, such as the free exercise of belief and religious practice in the whole community of states. He goes on to quote our Lord in Matthew 13, 24-30. In actual practice, he condemned the pressure put on a group of non-Catholics by the Croatian government, to become Catholics as a unifying force for the country. The late, persecuted, Cardinal Stepinac also condemned that particular government for exercising undue influence on these people in his diocese. Cardinal Stepinac opposed both Communist deceit and Nazi force. He championed separation of church and state even when it was his church that was supposed to benefit from such union.

On the other hand, there are some people in the United States who have such an exaggerated notion of separation of church and state that they want to get the chaplains out of the armed forces and out of the state prisons. They want to take the religious motto off our coins, "In God we trust." Catholics, of course, are against such an extreme version of separation of church and state.

This article has for its purpose one goal, to provide information that will make for better understanding among all religious groups. For instance, two views on a stained glass window can be so different. From within the church, the figures are clearly seen. The rays of the sun come shining through the stained glass picture. But, for one, outside the church, who has ever see the other side, the figures are blurred, ugly, and indistinguishable.

Once we can understand each other, and see each other's viewpoint "from the inside", then we can devote ourselves wholeheartedly to the service to mankind, especially the poor, the ill, the invalids, and those who are less fortunate.

Pray for each other that St. Paul's words come true, that we "have Christ dwelling through faith in our hearts, so that being rooted and grounded in love we may be able to comprehend the breadth and length and height and depth and to know Christ's love which surpasses all knowledge." (Ephesians 3, 18).

(Next week: Does the Church ever give any advice to members on how to vote.)

Egg Raisers Should Order Chicks Early

If the early bird gets the worm, it means one thing: there's no worm for the late bird. And what is true about birds and worms is also true about egg producers and profits, says C. F. Parrish, who is in charge of poultry work for the N. C. Agricultural Extension Service. The egg producer who gets his pullet chicks early will get the fall and early winter profits from high-priced eggs.

"There are apparently fewer layers on the farm," Parrish said. "And everyone is expecting egg prices to go up in the near future. In fact, we believe eggs will average three cents more per dozen than they did in 1959."

To get in on the higher prices, Parrish urges producers to place orders for pullet chicks at an early date for these reasons:

- (1) Breeders can give you the quality of chicks when you want them;
- (2) You will make more money with the early hatched chicks; and
- (3) You will not be caught by a chick shortage caused by producers who waited until the market looks like a sure thing before placing their order.

North Carolina exported about 1,500 truck loads of market eggs to northern markets in 1959. "Let's make it 2,000 truck loads this year," Parrish urged.

CHALK TALK...with a Southern accent!

This "chalk talk" is good news for all who live or work in the South. Each of the chalk marks you see above represents a sizable industrial development last year along the lines of the Southern Railway System. The total comes to 269—more than one for every working day.

What does this mean to the South—and to you? For one thing, it means an estimated 21,000 new job opportunities for men and women here. It means expanded home-town payrolls to stimulate and help sustain a community's economic growth and general well-being. And the investment of $369 million in these industrial projects represents, too, a solid vote of confidence in the modern South and its bright future.

Yes, this is the message our "chalk talk" brings to you. It is a record of steady, diversified growth today and a prophecy of still more wonderful things to come. All of us helped bring it about. All of us benefit.
