Sanford Notes Cherokee Vote

Cherokee County voters will march back to the polls with other North Carolinians Saturday to vote for this state's next governor.

In the past few days both candidates for the office have turned their attention to the mountain section, both speaking in Murphy and surrounding areas.

Cherokee voters got a firsthand look at Terry Sanford last Thursday. I. Beverly Lake, his opponent, spoke in Murphy Monday.

Cherokee County followed the voting trend of western North Carolina in the first primary by favoring Sanford. He picked up a whopping 1,286 votes here while Lake managed to gather only 95.

Lake ran third in the field of gubernatorial candidates in Cherokee County. John D. Larkins Jr. was second with 764.

Referring to his heavy majority in the first primary from western North Carolina voters, Sanford declared here Thursday:

"I want this area back in North Carolina. It has been a part of Tennessee long enough. I want to understand western North Carolina's problems.

"I am going to do my best to get western North Carolina on the rise. It has a great potential. I am counting on you and you can count on me."

Roy A. Taylor, Democratic candidate for 12th District Congressman, said at the meeting that he would join hands with Sanford to improve the western area.

In his speech before Murphy voters, Lake dwelt on the threat of increased taxes and improvement of the state's public school system.

He asserted that "we want to attract new industry to North Carolina so the laboring people can have a wider choice of jobs and higher wages."

He touched only briefly on the NAACP issue.

HANDSOME COUPLE

How's that story go about Dirty Dan and that sweet young thing he was always chasing around the countryside. Well, we can't remember and besides we don't have time with Wagon Train just around the corner. For a little local color we have pictured this week, Black Blain and his gal, Bobbie. In real life they are Mr. and Mrs. Blain Stalcup of Murphy.
