NORTH CAROLINA MEANS BETTER LIVING

Long known for its good and abundant sea foods, North Carolina is fast becoming an important beef-producing area as well—a fact welcomed by tourists who prefer beefsteak to fish steak. This year, North Carolina farmers will raise more than a half million head of beef cattle, an increase of nearly 200% over the number raised just ten years ago.

Increasing, too, are the numbers of enlightened areas throughout the state that endorse the "legal control" laws governing the sale of beer and ale—another fact welcomed by many North Carolina visitors.

HAIR SPLITTING

Democrat-turned-Republican Heinz Rollman, who has done his share of political maneuvering in an effort to find a political home in North Carolina, found this week that Congress can sometimes maneuver with hair-splitting precision.

The House Administration Committee said Rollman couldn't contest the election of 12th District Rep. Roy A. Taylor because Rollman notified Taylor of his intentions by registered mail instead of in person.

The committee noted that Rollman had a chance to notify Taylor in person because Taylor returned to the district after he was sworn in at Washington July 2. How the committee expected Rollman to know this is beyond comprehension. Certainly Taylor himself couldn't be expected to keep the determined Rollman informed as to his whereabouts.

Taylor himself said he wasn't notified that his special election to fill out the late David Hall's term was being contested by Rollman within the stipulated time.

Maybe that is legislative reason enough but if the committee's reasons for turning Rollman down are only the reasons given, Rollman should be allowed to contest the election with all his might if not to his heart's content.
