Dear Sally
By Sally Shaw

DEAR SALLY: Our father who was a widower, recently remarried. Both my sister and I (both of us married) are very fond of our father's new wife, but we're always uncertain as to just how to introduce her to our friends. We feel that calling her "mother" is not correct, and speaking of her as "our father's wife" sounds cold and impersonal. Please, will you advise us on this? THE DAUGHTERS.

DEAR DAUGHTERS: I agree with you, the term "mother" is not right, and "our father's wife" seems cold, especially since there is a bond of affection between you and this lady. She is, after all, your stepmother, even though you and your sister are mature. I think it would be nice to introduce her that way. You probably call her by her first name, so you could say, "Mary, our new stepmother, of whom we are all so fond," or something like this, which would indicate your gracious acceptance of her.

DEAR SALLY: I'm in a spot I'm wondering if a man can still be considered a gentleman if he breaks his engagement to a girl. Before we became engaged, I thought this girl was wonderful and fine in every way, but since the announcement she has assumed a proprietary attitude towards me, has become nagging and shrewish, and unreasonable in her demands. If she's like this now, how will she be after we're married? I realize I'm not the perfect man, and I'm not looking for absolute perfection in the girl I marry--but this situation is rapidly becoming more than I can take, and I'd like to get out of it. But how? RIP.

DEAR RIP: A man breaks an engagement exactly as a girl would. You tell her in the most tactful way you can and she are not at all suited for each other. And, no matter how disagreeable this chore may seem to you now, it is far, far better to have a broken engagement now than a broken home later.

DEAR SALLY: We're having a little trouble with our next-door neighbors. They built a fence along the property line between us, to prevent our kids from running onto their lawn, and then they planted high rosebushes along this fence. These bushes have grown so large that they hang way over our driveway, and we have the greatest trouble mowing the strip of grass between our driveway and the fence, and the thorns whip into the windows of our car as we drive in or back out. I have a couple of cuts on my arm and one on my forehead to prove it. We've asked them to trim these bushes, but they say this would ruin the bushes--and when we threatened to trim them ourselves, they said they would sue us since the bushes are their property. Do you have any solution? JONESY.

DEAR JONESY: You have a perfectly legal right to trim any part of those bushes that extends over your property. Anything on your side of the fence belongs to you.

TO TROUBLED PARENTS: There's really not much you can do for a 24-year-old daughter who thinks she knows all the answers and refuses to listen to her parents. And after all, she is past the age of consent. It's heartbreaking, I know, to see someone you love heading for the reefs, but some people must learn everything through bitter experience--and I do hope your daughter will weather the inevitable storm. I'm sure you can help her then.
