BOOK REVIEW

"Never Be Lonely"

By Pauline Woodruff Titus

Englewood Cliffs, N. J.:

Prentice-Hall, Inc. 184 pp. $3.50

(Editor's Note: This is one of a series of book reviews by Miss Maria Travis that will be published in The Scout. Miss Titus' books are available for your reading pleasure at the Murphy Carnegie Library.)

"I have talked to many people, old and young, men and women, rich and poor, educated and uneducated, in an effort to find out how loneliness affected their lives. Each of them readily admitted that loneliness was a strong, personal experience. It was something they all had felt, something no human being could escape entirely. This is an important point to remember--that although loneliness affects different people in different ways and to different degrees, it nevertheless touches every human being.

"It is interesting to note, incidentally, the different ways in which people picture loneliness. To one loneliness might suggest a vast, empty space--perhaps a desert or the dark void of the universe.

"Another might think of a metropolis, teeming with people, jammed with skyscrapers and drab factories, from which he feels cut off, maybe a winter sky at sunset or a strain of minor music such as Sibelius' FINLANDIA, is enough to suggest the feeling of aloneness. How do you picture loneliness? It may tell you something valuable about yourself."

This is now "Never Be Lonely" begins and its author, Pauline Titus, gives you practical, concrete guidance as she shows you how to meet and master your own individual problem by converting loneliness into creative solitude. Beethoven used his loneliness to create great music; Jane Adams, social work at Hull House; Toulouse Lautrec, masterpieces in art.

Miss Titus lists the seven basic causes for loneliness under the following titles: (1) The egoists live on mountain tops (2) The pretenders are running away (3) The selfish live only on the surface (4) The flat-minded sleep through life (5) The aggressive are going the wrong way (6) The insiders are always charming (7) The "moth balls" live in the past.

After studying each category carefully, perhaps you will find a combination which accounts for your own loneliness. The next step is to evaluate your activities and to determine whether your personality is static, kinetic, or dynamic. Are you like a deserted tree, cute and distant, ative, or do you look up and up to noble heights like the majestic Cathedral Pines? "Never Be Lonely" provides a complete understanding for all readers who find life stifled by the pangs of loneliness.
