Soil Conservation News

By John S. Smith
During the month of October, technicians of the Soil Conservation Service have assisted fourteen farmers in developing complete Soil and Water Conservation Plans for their farms. These plans are made by the farmer and technicians using a Land Capability Map as a guide. This land capability map is an aerial photograph of a farm on which have been drawn lines marking out each different type of land. The types of soil are delineated by a Soil Conservation Scientist who is especially trained to classify soils.

The three factors that determine the classification of a soil are the amount of slope, the amount of erosion, and the basic material from which this soil was derived. When the soil scientist has completed his map of the farm showing the different types of soil, the aerial photo is sent to the Cartographic Laboratory in Spartanburg where an enlargement is made of the area

ASC News

By L. L. Kisselburg
The Cherokee County ASC Committee met with the Cherokee County Development Group in the ASC Office at 1:30 p.m., Tuesday, November 1, to select the ACP Practices that the group believes to be the most practical to offer to Cherokee County farmers in 1961.

The Cherokee County Development group is composed of the Cherokee County ASC Committee, Claude Paterson, A. J. Barton and T. L. Martin, John Smith, The county's SCS Technician and governing body, Charlie McDonald, Don Taylor and Bill Russell, Bunch A. Nugent, the U. S. Government Forester, Harold Hatchett, County Forest Ranger, Hugh Ables, Assistant County Agent, R. D. Bruce, FHA Supervisor. These men are farmers and employees of the USDA.

It is the policy of the USDA to have this meeting each year and have the group review each practice that the Government offers and select the practices and make recommendations to the state development group in Raleigh for their approval or disapproval.

I believe that we will have a program to offer the farmers about the same as the one we had for 1960.

Conservation is a job we must do every year.

to know the qualifications of the local candidates nominated by the Democratic Party to serve as our representatives in the coming sessions. These candidates are well known and respected for their sincerity, their loyalty and devotion to this area. They are candidates with experience in law and the legislative processes of our state and nation.

FOR CONGRESS
ROY A. TAYLOR
Congressman Roy A. Taylor is a native citizen of Western North Carolina; he has served in the Legislature, and as County Attorney for Buncombe County. He is a navy veteran and is a man of sincere predictable action.

FOR N. C. SENATE
W. FRANK FORSYTH
Senator Forsyth served in the 1959 Legislature and was Vice Chairman of the powerful committee on Conservation and Development. Other Committees he served on were: Appropriations, Banking, Construction, Higher Education, Insurance, Mental Institutions, Propositions and Grievances, and Public Utilities.

FOR N. C. HOUSE
MRS. G. W. COVER
Mrs. Cover represented the county in the 1943, 1945, and 1959 sessions of the House of Representatives.
In the 1924 State Convention, Mrs. Cover was elected a delegate to the first National Convention in which women were allowed to participate.
Mrs. Cover's outstanding work during all the sessions has been in education.

Every indication is that the Congress of the United States will have a Democratic majority. Only by re-electing Roy Taylor could our Representative be given important committee assignments and chairmanships!

In the last session of the North Carolina Legislature there was only one Republican Senator to 49 Democrats; five Republican House members to 115 Democrats.

ONLY DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATORS COULD BE EFFECTIVE AGAINST SUCH OVERWHELMING ODDS

Footlog Makes Politics
Boil In Mountains

The Footlog: It Crosses A Creek And Splits Democrats and Republicans

Pd. Pol. Adv.

"Reprint From The Charlotte News, October 25, 1960."

ANDREWS - Way up in the far reaches of North Carolina mountains in western-most Cherokee County the representative's race may be decided on the state's most unusual issue - a footlog.

This particular footlog received more publicity during the last session of the Legislature than any other creek-crossing in the history of the state.

Mother of the footlog debate is Cherokee County's lady representative to the General Assembly, Mrs. Lillie Mae Cover.

Mrs. Cover's name became familiar to newspaper readers during the last session due to several unusual bills she conceived. Capitol reporters dubbed her "the lady from Cherokee."

She first came to the public's attention when she sponsored--and got passed--a bill to provide traveling funds for representatives who were hard pressed to keep their bank balances in the black and still make the long trips to and from home to Raleigh, especially when the lawmakers lived as far away as she did.

Later in the session she returned to the front pages when she sponsored an innocent little item with the forthright title, the gerrymandering bill.

She was still battling a thousand when she pushed this one through to rearrange a few precincts in her county to the advantage of the Democrats and to the grief of the Republicans.

When she addressed the house in behalf of her bill to provide funds to build a footlog across a creek in her hometown of Andrews, "so little school children won't have to wade through that cold creek in the winter to get to school," she stirred up as much interest as was shown for any major bill that came before the House.

The story travelled the gamut from the front pages to the editorial pages in newspapers.

Editorial writers over the state split on the issue. To some the realization that a footlog could will be so important in a section of our state as to warrant a bill for its construction brought on a pleasant nostalgia.

To others it seemed that the inherent self-reliance of mountaineers had fallen to an all time low if they had to send to Raleigh to get a footlog instead of simply chopping down a tree across the creek in the time honored tradition.

But once again, Mrs. Cover had her way and the House passed a bill to provide $1,000 for the footlog.

To conservative mountain Republican this was the last straw. Mrs. Cover had dishonored the name of the mountains. Democrats, of course, were with Mrs. Cover.

So, the footlog was built, and a mighty fancy one it is too. Republicans contend that with a thousand dollars they could have built a bridge wide enough for cars.

There the issue stands, crossing the creek with frills seldom before seen on a mountain footlog.

Republicans are determined to unseat Mrs. Cover and have come out with a strong candidate, Construction man Herman (Bull Of the Woods) West.

And while the national debates may range from Matsui to food prices, Cherokee County folks will stick to the fable of the footlog and stay on opposite sides of the creek.
