Hodges In Cabinet

Goldsboro News-Argus

North Carolina's Governor Hodges is as close to incoming President Kennedy as any man in the South. Kennedy saw in Hodges a man of his own stripe. He recognized his great talents when he made him national chairman for business men for Kennedy. Kennedy was pleased with the manner in which Hodges executed that assignment. That showed when Kennedy called Hodges to New Hampshire on a moment's notice and with only a few hours to get there for a national television appearance with him.

Book Club Meets

The Seventh Grade Book Club was called to order by the Vice-President Homer Roberson. A short business session followed. Tripp Bourne, Chairman of the program committee presented Homer Roberson and William Fish, who gave book reviews.

During the month of October the Circulation of the Elementary Library was 1461 volumes and the circulation of the Traveling Science Library was 663 Volumes, making a total circulation of 2,124 volumes.

Bulletin Board displays in the Library was arranged by Betsy Scott, Pamela Chastain, Dianne Wilkins and Barbara Thompson.

Now Let's Correct These Two Weaknesses

(Spartanburg Herald) It is good now, with the campaign fresh on our minds, to think about corrections that are needed in our method of selecting national leadership.

Two weaknesses emerge above all others: (1) The electoral vote system; and (2) The man-killing pace of campaigning.

People on both sides of the political fence ought to get together to do something about these.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE

It should be either abolished or fundamentally altered. Created to serve the days when personal campaigning by candidates was impossible, it is an albatross around the neck of democratic choice today. A Constitutional amendment would be necessary.

Each state has the number of electoral votes that it has representatives and senators. These votes are cast for the presidential candidate who receives the largest number of votes in that state.

The system has three major flaws.

IT DISFRANCHISES all citizens who vote for the losing candidate in a given state. Their votes don't count at all in the Electoral College.

IT PUTS an extremely high premium on minority bloc voting in the large industrial states with the largest number of electoral votes. A few thousand votes can swing a large electoral vote either way. Remember the great emphasis of the campaign on the five or six pivotal states?

IT CAN DENY the presidency to a candidate who won the most popular votes. This has happened three times.

Two improvements have been suggested: Divide the electoral vote in each state in proportion to that state's popular vote. Or, go to a straight popular vote for the presidency and vice presidency on a nationwide basis.

The first plan seems more attainable, and would serve the purpose.

THE CAMPAIGN

It's a good thing that both Senator Kennedy and Vice President Nixon are young robust men. An older, less hardy person simply couldn't have kept up with the strenuous demands of the past few weeks.

Health and physical stamina are valuable qualities for a president. But there are more important considerations.

Even these two showed the grind in their gravel voices and swollen hands, and fatigue-lined faces.

A shorter campaign would seem indicated. Or else some limitation on the number of appearances, length of travel, and the like.

The remedy must be a matter of agreement between the major parties. It ought to be worked out far in advance of the next conventions.

We don't want to kill our president even before he's elected.

All persons who bear the blessed title of 'parent' have the personal responsibility to see that their children are growing up fully appreciative of the rights of God and their fellow-man.

BOOK REVIEW "The Beat Scene"

Edited and with an introduction by Elias Wilentz. Photographs by Fred McDarragh. New York: The Citadel Press, 192 pp. $1.95

Reviewed by MARIA LOUISE TRAVIS in a flat top stories above a Puerto Rican storefront church or huddled miserably in a sooty basement in Greenwich Village, lives a group of shallow rebels who call themselves the poets of this "Beat Generation." Jack Kerouac has been called the St. Jack of this movement; Allen Ginsberg has been called the Prophet. These non-conformists have taken a vow of poverty the better to be untrammelled by modern society, a vow which society has helped them keep the economics of publishing and selling poetry being what they are. The Beats believe that civilization is coming apart at the seams. After reading their poetry I'm inclined to agree.

Various photographs show the Beats reading their works, partying in their "pads," dreaming in front of store windows, and feeding the pigeons while the eternal search for inspiration goes on.

The rest of the book is made up of Beat poetry---the like of which you have possibly never seen. For example, the first stanza of Ted Joan's poem called "Playmates":

Let's play something. Let's play anything. Let's drive around town and sling paint at happy-looking people and throw shovels into store front church windows.

Or a few lines from a poem by Jack Micheline:

I tell you
I tell you
All people are enslaved
I tell you
I tell you
All people are enslaved
In these modern times
the people don't believe the people feel so insecure

If there is any value to Beatnik poetry, it must be accidental, revealing the differences between the true artists and the would-be artists. Many of these young writers display an infantile rebellion against any restrictions, simply for the kick they get out of it. For them, the means has become the end, and they flit from one kick to another looking Bohemian, wearing odd clothes, growing a beard or a ponytail, and strolling through Washington Square Park with a guitar and a sad looking chick.

Ralph Waldo Emerson said: "Each age must write its own books . . ." Measured against other genuine literary movements, it seems to me the majority of the Beats are America's foolish young boys. I can only hope their howling against a crazy civilization blows itself hoarse before the mid-twentieth century becomes improperly tagged as the "Beat Generation."

This book is available at Murphy High School Library.

Legal Control is Working . . .

The Legal Sale of Beer Produced Over 8 Million Dollars in State Excise Taxes for 1960

NORTH CAROLINA MALT BEVERAGE INDUSTRY

RALEIGH, N. C. Sept. 30, 1960

PAY TO THE ORDER OF
Treasurer of the State of North Carolina
Eight Million One Hundred Fifty Three Thousand Five Hundred Forty Three
State Excise Taxes $ 8,153,543.00 DOLLARS
SIGNED: [Signature]

The counties and municipalities permitting the legal sale of beer will receive their share of these taxes early in 1961 based on the new census report. The exact amounts will be published at that time. During the past 10 years, this tax has produced more than $60,000,000.

This tax money is in addition to local license fees and franchise taxes collected by local governments permitting the legal sale of beer. And all this is in addition to the local taxes paid North Carolina by beer distributors, plus gas taxes and income taxes at all levels paid by those employed in this business.

The so-called "dry" counties do not receive any of this revenue nor do they receive any law enforcement assistance from the State ABC Board. And there is no way to collect any sales taxes or license fees from the bootlegger.

Under North Carolina "local option laws" any county or city by a vote of its people, can participate in the advantages of "legal control," including law enforcement and tax benefits. 85% of North Carolina citizens in 66 of the State's 100 counties have chosen "legal control."

Is your county receiving these benefits?
