

Federation Will Not Have Buying Agents

The City of Asheville has purchased the lease and assets from the Carolina Tobacco Corporation to be used as a city garage and storage of street equipment.

The Farmers Federation who has operated the Carolina Tobacco Warehouse for many years will not sell tobacco this season.

This year the Farmers Federation will not have a representative in Cherokee and Clay Counties to receive tobacco as has been the practice for many years.

Soil Conservation News

By John S. Smith

A new method of seeding grasses and legumes together has been tried over a period of the last five years or so in several of the far western states. It is known as alternate-row seeding, and promises to be much better than broadcast seeding or mixed seeding. The main advantage of the alternate-row method over usual methods is that a stand of both grass and legume is obtained to start with and the stand is maintained in the same proportion during the life of the seeding.

The original seeding is accomplished by using a double box seeder. Every other spout in one box is closed off, and the alternate spouts in the second box are closed off. The grass seed is placed in one box and the legume seed in the other. Rates of seeding for each kind of seed can be regulated so that the desired amount of seed is sowed.

A field seeded by this method has alternating rows of grass and legume throughout the width. Planted in this fashion, the grass and legume do not compete as severely as they do in broadcast stands. Since half the stand is grass and half legume, hay made from the field is easily cured and kept. Cattle grazing in such fields do not run a risk of eating too much clover or other legume with the corresponding danger of bloating, as sometimes results from eating too much clover without grass.

Practically every field that has been seeded to legume and grass in this section has ended up with too much legume or too much grass. In order to bring back the proper balance it is generally necessary to destroy the entire stand and re-seed. Again after a couple of years the same situation exists again.

Washington and Oregon farmers who have tried the alternate-row method say that the resulting fields turn out more feed, hay, humus and fertility, plus a better balanced ration for their stocks.

It has been proven that milk and butterfat production dip and waver when legumes fail to keep up with faster-growing grasses. If the legume predominates, stock runs a greater risk of bloat from eating excessive amounts of high-protein feed. This is particularly possible in early spring or late fall when a heavy frost may freeze the clover or other legume.
