Senator Sam Ervin Says.....

Washington - There is a tremendous interest in the inaugural of President-Elect Kennedy. A large delegation from North Carolina will attend the ceremonies which surround this great event. Inauguration - Inauguration ceremonies are, according to custom, conducted on a specially constructed platform over the central stairway of the east front of the Capitol. Workmen daily are putting the finishing touches to the construction of this platform. Upon it, the Nation's Chief Justice, Earl Warren, will administer the oath of office in the presence of the President-Elect's family, Cabinet members, Senators, Representatives, Governors, Diplomatic Corps, and thousands of spectators. Immediately upon taking the oath of office, President Kennedy will deliver his inaugural address and then will lead the most colorful of all parades in America down Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House. New Administration - President-Elect Kennedy may not have a Rooseveltian mandate, but he has a working knowledge of both the Senate and the House. He has a reservoir of good will to carry with him in many of the matters that he has proposed, I do not know what exact forms legislation will take in specific areas, since the new administration has not submitted its program to the Congress. Thus far the President - Elect has been leery of ushering in his administration with a stormy note on the majority vote amendment to the Senate Rules on cloture. Hodges - It was a delight to me to see President - Elect Kennedy give North Carolina recognition in the selection of former Governor Luther H. Hodges to be his Secretary of Commerce. Luther Hodges will bring a good approach to the problems that confront every Secretary of Commerce. I shall urge his confirmation for this important post when the matter comes to the Senate for its approval.
