ly, we thought --- on the stage --- we had the same feelings about L. Y. Ballentine and Edwin Gill.

Boiling Spring Ne

Mr. Joe Martin visits Boiling Springs Sunday. Mr. James C. Ledford was the guest of J. W. O'Dell on Sunday afternoon.

MORE INAUGURAL NOTES Prize for best-dressed among wives of State officials likely must go to Mrs. L. Y. Ballentine, wife of the Agriculture Commissioner --- a golden gown for the inaugural ball --- and a big flowered hat for the inaugural ceremonies. Very chic --- and a beautiful ensemble.

WE HELD OUR BREATH Raleigh, now proud as punch of its spanking, modern-atomtomorrow City Hall, has promised to install air conditioning in the Auditorium before Debutante Ball time rolls around later this year.

HE BUSSIED IT We never had a Governor who looked more governorish than L. Hodges as he bowed out last Thursday -- He'll miss us --- Handsome man.

FACE-LIFTING NEEDED This marked the seventh time --- the first was in 1936 --- Secretary of State had been sworn in --- and Thad Eure's remaining there those years --- I've thought often --- kept us from having an unusually good Governor. As they took their places --- rather tired-

INSTANT COFFEE with the percolated taste

By Eula N. Greenwood SANFORD'S LAW PARTNERS When he moved the 60 rolling miles from Fayetteville to Raleigh last week to become the property of North Carolina for four years, he left behind two active members of his law firm.

His father, Stacy Weaver, was as a young man connected with Rutherford College, was principal of Jonesville High School in Yadkin County, and was later superintendent of Statesville and Durham City Schools, and is now president of Methodist College, now operating but still under construction.

One of the greatest helps this school had was Terry Sanford. So, our new Governor, who has assured us of a New Day for public education in North Carolina -- and was elected on that premise -- was closely tied in with privately supported institutions, both Presbyterian and Methodist -- and surrounded with it from law partners! -- before he ever actually got into the race for Governor.

NOT THE SAME We had never seen Terry Sanford wearing glasses --- until he easily slipped them on a scant 10 minutes before taking that oath --- aged him ten years, too --- and made him look like a movie FBI man who had just found the clue.

But the man who attracted the most neck-stretching was that cute little redhead, Bob Kennedy, who was recognized at first by very few --- because of his youthful appearance --- and the fact that his hair was shorter and brushed much better than we have seen it on television.

Soil Conservation News

By John Smith The Cherokee County Soil Conservation District has just completed its seventh year of operation, the most successful so far. During 1960 more than two hundred farmers were assisted in establishing one or more soil and water conservation practices on their farms.

Complete Soil & Water Conservation Plans were developed by fifty five farmers with the assistance of technicians of the Soil Conservation Service, cooperating with the District. These plans include two aerial photographs of the individual farm, one of which shows the types and classes of soils contained within the farm bound aires, and the second shows the physical features such as roads, buildings, field divisions, streams, woodland, and so forth. The plans also include general information and instructions for carrying out the needed conservation measures.

Sixty farmers signed cooperative agreements with District, the preliminary step in the process leading to a complete soil and water conservation plan. At the end of 1960, four hundred thirty farmers in Cherokee County signed cooperative agreements with the District, and two hundred ninety six of these had received complete soil and water conservation plans covering their farms.

One of the most common practices for which farmers request assistance is the establishment of tile drainage. During 1960, approximately twenty five farmers asked for assistance in laying out and establishing tile ditches. About twenty of these farmers completed the ditches, resulting in the use of eight thousand one hundred fifty feet of 4 inch and 6 inch drain tile.

In addition to the tile drainage, more than two thousand five hundred feet of open ditches were surveyed and constructed. These two types of drainage resulted in better and more economical farming of one about one hundred acres of formerly wet land, which now can produce good crops or pasture.

Another important conservation practice carried out by a large no. of farmers is tree planting. Conservation farmers re-established about two hundred twenty acres of woodland. Part of this was by tree planting and by allowing natural seeding to do the job.
