Health Notes

By W.S. Cann

Health District Director

With spring here, we would like to stress the need for protection against the summer diseases. Number one, of course, is polio. While we cannot give but three doses of polio free to children up to six years of age, we recommend four doses. No cases of polio have been reported when four doses have been given. Last year, the total number of cases dropped but the paralytic cases remained high. This could be due to three things. First, more children and adults are having four doses of vaccine. Second, most polio cases are having the diagnosis confirmed by viral laboratories. This has ruled out many so-called non-paralytic polio cases. Third, last year was not "a polio year" throughout the world.

Another "spring prevention" that is always necessary, especially today with the great movement of population, is typhoid shots, especially in a resort area with boating, fishing, and swimming. If there is any doubt about your typhoid shots and it has been several years, better protection is assured by taking a series of three weekly injections then a booster every four years thereafter, except in typhoid areas. Typhoid fever is always with us. It is a very serious disease and a crippling one.

When much traveling is planned, especially out of U. S., a recent smallpox vaccination is a necessity.

During the hot summer months, summer diarrhea of babies still occur. A good baby formula sterilized according to your doctor and kept in a cool ice-box completely prevents this. Again, this is a very serious disease.

It is just good common sense to protect yourselves and your children for the summer months.

Ranger Warns Of Elm Spanworm Infestation

District Ranger, Bunch A. Nugent, Tusquigeo Ranger District, Cherokee and Clay Counties, North Carolina National Forests says a caterpillar known as the elm spanworm which has infested the forests of North Georgia, Tennessee and Western North Carolina for the past five years is still active in its attack on the hardwood tree species. This is the insect that appears later in its life cycle as a small white moth which has been observed in large numbers throughout this area.

According to entomologists working in the area, the outbreak should eventually run its course and collapse because of natural factors. Weather conditions, and a number of natural enemies (beetles, moths, flies, and diseases) act as controls for the spanworm. The overall area affected is expanding, but the concentration of insects is generally becoming thinner with the exception of small areas of high infestation. Because trees are in danger of being killed from repeated attack, the U. S. Forest Service is planning to treat the Coweeta Hydrological Laboratory drainage area which is suffering from heavy infestation. DOT will be applied by airplane to the 5,000 acre area.

The U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service has found from past studies that careful application with low chemical rates cause no appreciable damage to wildlife or fish population.

The Forest Service has carefully evaluated these spraying projects to make certain that all the resources of the forest are adequately protected.

Spraying will take place during the first week in May, depending upon the development of the insect brood and weather conditions.
