ENERGY SAVING WAYS With RANGES Using the surface units of a range can be a very energy-efficient way of preparing food. However, surface units can also be high energy wasters if proper utensils and cooking techniques are not used.

From Whirlpool home economists, here are some suggestions to follow that can help you get the most energy efficiency from your range's cooktop:

• Fit the size of the pan to the size of the surface unit. Utensils are extremely important in cooking because they conduct heat directly from the heating element to the utensil and then to the food. A small pan on a large surface unit wastes energy and costs you money.

• Pots and pans should have flat bottoms to make the best contact with the surface unit. A warped, uneven-bottomed pan will waste energy.

• Reflector bowls should be kept clean and shiny. When dirty they absorb extra energy instead of reflecting it to the utensil containing food.
