Broome-Tomorrow's America Foundation:

HOW TO BE A LIVER OF LIFE

There are many things that determine the quality of one's life. These include loving, laughing, and, of course, living.

If a person's love is not adequate, then he has not lived. The world is in so much turmoil today that more people need to exercise the feeling of love. It is a very strong, and special feeling. It is a quality every human being should possess.

The second quality is laughing. You must learn to laugh at yourself before you can laugh at others. Laughing is good for the mind and the soul. Some people find it difficult to laugh, with others, touched by the hand of laughter, enjoy it.

Last, in order to be a liver of life, you must learn to live. If a person has lived one hundred years and can't look back on their life and say, "I've enjoyed my life, and I've accomplished every goal I had set for myself," then he has not lived.

Live every day as if it's your last day. Make every day count.

When you join these words together, they are all the BASICS of life. You cannot love, laugh or live, then you your life will be incomplete.

Comments: This workshop was designated as the most dynamic, stimulating, enjoyable and thought provoking of them all by the workshop participants.
