

Clester Locklear attending Water Works Operator's School

Clester Locklear of Pembroke is attending the forty-third annual Water Works Operator's School being held during the week of July 26-30 at the Jane S. McKimmon Center in Raleigh, NC. This school is conducted by the North Carolina Water Works Operators Association and the Division of Continuing Education of North Carolina State University with assistant and sponsorship of the Department of Civil Engineering, NCSU; the North Carolina Section of the American Water Works Association; the N.C. League of Municipalities; and the Division of Health Services of the N.C. Department of Human Resources. The purpose of this school is to provide instruction on the fundamentals of water treatment as well as to present the latest developments in water treatment and water supply regulations. At the completion of this school, a written examination will be given for certification as a water treatment facilities operator in accordance with North Carolina Statutes. This program has proven to be of great benefit to waterworks personnel and to the towns, cities, agencies, and institutions that they serve.

The Robeson County Indian Caucus

One of the first law codes in history was that established by Hammurabi, one of the greatest kings of Babylonia. It contained nearly 300 legal provisions.

A worker in East Berlin was fired when he showed up at work on time. He was accused of buying an American watch.

You can always tell a well-informed man: his views are the same as yours.

Lets blow your nose pardner... before that final attack...

Robeson County Extension Chairman

Since tobacco contributes nearly half of the total farm income in Robeson County, it is only natural that any uncertainty in this major commodity creates shock waves that affect practically everyone in this farming area. As the tobacco markets opened, it seemed obvious that uncertainty exists throughout the tobacco industry from buyers to producers. This uncertainty was most evident as the markets opened with a slight "meow" instead of the big roar that accompanied last year's strong opening.

and their attitude can be reflected in one word--frustration. Even though prices are expected to increase, especially since price supports are up from last year, most farmers are already accepting the fact that this year's crop will not bring them any greater gross receipts than last year's offerings. This fact, coupled with the incessant attacks on tobacco, has created a situation of tension and fear that is making most farmers question the future of tobacco.

The imminent increases in the federal tobacco tax is contributing to the frustrations of local producers. Since the tax seems to be viewed as just another means of weakening the tobacco industry, an almost universal question seems to be, "How long will the program that has just passed last, and what are we going to turn to if tobacco fails?" Naturally these questions do not have concrete answers, but speculation sometimes runs rampant.

The attitude of frustration that presently prevails generally indicates that a large number of local producers are fearful of any future changes in the tobacco program but seem resigned to the fact that those changes nevertheless will ultimately come. Thus, hardly anyone is losing faith in tobacco as a continuing major contributor to local farm income, considerable thought is being given to alternatives which may be explored. Some of those alternatives will be explored in next week's column.
