INCREDIBLE BUT TRUE!

The U.S. Army Reserve, when organized as America's first federal reserve force in 1908, consisted of only 364 medical officers. These individuals could be called to active duty by the Secretary of War in emergencies.

In the past 75 years, the Army Reserve has increased nearly 850 times its original number. It now includes more than 450,000 soldiers...nearly 240,000 of them in Army Reserve units. And it has grown more significantly in importance. Today's Army Reserve gives the Total Army the strength it needs to defend our freedom in an emergency, while allowing us to avoid the cost of maintaining those 450,000 soldiers in the full-time Army.
