Youth shooting development seminar scheduled for Florence

As part of the National Rifle Association's Youth Shooting Development Seminars, a new venture which teaches adults how to start a junior shooting program, a workshop will be held Sunday, March 4th at ESAB Recreation Club, 411 South Ebenezer Road, Florence, SC.

"This program has the potential of playing a major role in shaping the future of the shooting sports," said Matt Szramoski, manager of NRA's Youth Programs Department. "The seminars teach adults how to start a new Junior shooting program at their club or improve an existing one and develop into a sustained program. Getting kids involved is crucial to the growth of the shooting sports." Szramoski added that NRA support won't stop at the seminars. "We're available anytime somebody has a question," Szramoski said. "The support doesn't end as soon as the seminar's finished. We want to help people develop string programs however we can."

The seminar will last approximately six hours and will be instructed by a knowledgeable NRA field representative or support staff. Some of the topics to be addressed include budgeting, applying for grants and specific grants that are available, equipment needs, recruiting adult volunteers, promoting the program to kids, and keeping the kids active in the program. The seminars will also expose the participants to a variety of NRA youth programs, such as Marksmanship Qualification, a merit system that provides awards for youths as they develop and improve their marksmanship skills.

The instruction will be a combination of lecture and exercises, based in part on the NRA book, Developing Your Youth Shooting Sports Program. Filled with questions and activities that will be incorporated into the instruction, the book will make Saturday's seminar extremely interactive, and will also give the participants a feel for what needs to be done to start or improve their junior shooting program. The future junior shooting program leaders will also partake in actual air gun shooting exercises, where each person will earn a rating, giving them a better understanding of what will be involved in the program.

"What we're trying to accomplish," Szramoski said, "is that people will leave the seminar wanting to start a junior program, and they will have all of the tools and resources to confidently get one going, and ensure that it continues for many years to come."

The seminar fee is $7 in advance or $10 at the door. To register, or for more information, please call (703) 267- 1505, or log onto www.nrahq.org/youth/seminar, where an on-line registration form is available. The seminars will soon be available in all 50 states. For a complete schedule, log onto the same Web address as listed above.

Along The Robeson Trail

by Dr. Stan Knick, Director, UNCP Native American Resource Center

In the past few segments, we have been looking at a valuable book for those interested in a variety of Native American views (Native Heritage: Personal Accounts by American Indians 1790 to the Present, edited by Arlene Hirschfelder). And of course there are many thousands of books which could be useful in one way or another to students of Native America. Some books about Native Americans are specific to a particular tribe or nation. Some books concern themselves with geographical areas such as the Northeast, or with "culture areas" such as the Plains. Other books are about specific topics, such as Indian dance or arts and crafts. Still others concentrate on certain time periods, such as prehistory or the twentieth century.

There are also books which combine information about many tribes, areas, topics and time periods. One such book is the Encyclopedia of North American Indians (edited by Frederick Hoxie; Houghton Mifflin Co., 1996). This is a particularly useful reference because it allows the reader to scan through an immense body of information or to target particular items alphabetically.

The tribes and nations which are included seem almost endless (as long as one is interested in Indian people north of Mexico; perhaps the title should have mentioned Indians of the U. S. and Canada). From Abenaki to Zuni, most of The People are there. There is even an entry about the Lumbee (co-written by the late Professor Adolph Dial and Dr. Linda Oxendine). But many of the other federally-unrecognized people are omitted (Coharie, Saponi, Waccamaw, etc.). But it is good that at least the Lumbee were included.

Where this book really shines is in the topics it includes. Although none of the topical entries goes into extreme detail, enough information is given to get a reader started on the road to research of that topic. Whether one wants to know about dreams or the Dawes Act, about mascots or movies, about potlatch or powwows, this book can help. Citations are given with each topic to lead the reader on to other references on the subject.

Another excellent feature of this book is the collection of photographs which are interspersed throughout the text. Among the most fascinating of these is the 1910 photograph of the chiefs of the Iroquois Confederacy seated in the Council House on the Six Nations Reserve (the men are all wearing suits, and one holds a long wampum belt). There is also a picture of Will Rogers and the female cast of his "Follies" (taken about 1925). And then there is that well-known photograph of the very serious-looking Lumbee girls basketball team, standing in front of Old Main in 1928.

This encyclopedia also presents information about a great many Native American individuals. From Cochise and Complanter to Joseph and Wovoka, readers can learn about who these people were and what contributions they made. Anyone with a general interest in Native America (north of Mexico), and especially anyone with children who are interested in the subject, could benefit from this encyclopedia.

For more information, visit the Native American Resource Center in historic Old Main Building, on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Pembroke (our Internet address is www.uncp.edu/nativemuseum).

Education curriculum library named for donors at UNCP

PEMBROKE, N.C. The UNC Pembroke Board of Trustees approved in its Feb. 23 meeting, naming the curriculum library in the School of Education after a Concord, N.C. couple.
The late Maria J. McCrimmon is a 1964 UNCP graduate with a B.S. degree in education. John H. McCrimmon originally contributed approximately $100,000 in memory of his wife, who passed away in 1997.
Prior to his death on Jan. 11, Mr. McCrimmon placed approximately $150,000 of his assets in trust for UNCP.

"This university made a real difference in the life of Maria McCrimmon, and the gifts are Mr. McCrimmon's way of showing his deep appreciation," said Lynda Parlett, Director of Development. "At age 42, Mrs. McCrimmon was a reluctant student, traveling daily from Bladen County where Mr. McCrimmon was the minister of a Baptist church."

"Mr. McCrimmon encouraged his wife to complete her degree, and Mrs. McCrimmon developed a great deal of confidence as a result," Ms. Parlett said. The library will be known as the John H. and Maria J. McCrimmon Education Curriculum Laboratory. In other business, architects were approved for the new science building ($9.4 million) and major renovations to the Oxendine Science Building ($8 million) and the Jones Athletic Complex ($8.2 million).

It is the first step in utilizing funds from the $3.1 billion bond referendum that was approved by voters in November. UNCP will invest $46.6 million in new and renovated campus buildings over the next six years.

The top two floors of the Oxendine Building will be converted to classrooms and faculty offices for several departments, including Sociology, Social Work and Criminal Justice, new classrooms, a general purpose room, sports medicine labs, offices and air conditioning will be added to the Health and Physical Education facility.

BUDGET CRUNCH
Chancellor Allen C. Meadors informed the board that the university is required to return about $500,000 from its 2000-2001 budget because of the state financial crisis. The money will primarily come from the budget for marketing and recruitment of new students.

"We wanted to make sure that we did not touch academic or student programs," Chancellor Meadors said. "We will lose some students, but signs look good for solid enrollment gains for next year," Chancellor Meadors encouraged the trustees to lobby state legislators for money to finance new enrollment gains.

"If they take away new enrollment money, we will have to cap enrollment," he said. "The legislature has charged us with a mission to grow, and if they take this money away it will be disastrous."

A MARCHING BAND
The Board of Trustees heard reports about two new projects, including the Honors College, which is slated to begin in fall 2001. Located in Old Main, the Honors College will be a community of high achieving scholars. Director Carolyn Thompson told the board, 14 students, with average SAT scores of 1200, have already applied for admission.

Dr. Thompson said the College would provide cultural, academic and social enrichment to about 35 students when filled.

"Also on the drawing board is a marching band for the university," Chancellor Meadors said.

"A marching band would offer our students another great experience," he said. "It would bring together a diverse group of students who would form strong bonds."
