

Bellevue with equal facility, since, by preventing its return, the Porte would render herself completely mistress of the Black Sea.

It is now generally admitted, that Barmaparte has in view the Alligators and Arabs arrived at Cairo; it remains, therefore, to be considered what course he will next pursue. Upon this question, a morning paper makes the following judicious remarks.

"It seems to be generally imagined, that he would not attempt to cross the Isthmus of Suez, in order to gain the shores of the Red Sea through the Desert. Supposing, however, that he had subdued the resistance of the Egyptian Bays, and dissipated their immediate fears of any design against themselves, he might find them ready to facilitate his passage through their dominions. Perhaps, in this case, he might attempt a route in many respects preferable to that through the Desert to Suez. According to the accounts of travellers, there is no scarcity of vessels upon the Nile, and indeed his transports might be fitted to his navigation. Indeed, therefore, of crossing the Desert from Cairo to Suez, it would be much more eligible to mount up the Nile to Coptos or Copahos. This mode of travelling would be much more commodious for his army; he would pass through a fertile country, which would supply him with every thing. From Coptos he might travel through the Desert to Cossir. This route is perfectly practicable, and presents many advantages.

"That he might ascend the Nile, will scarcely be disputed; that he might march upon the banks of the Nile by the route of the caravans to Cossir, seems likewise very possible. Of this journey, Barmaparte in his letters on Egypt, says, in winter, the journey to Cossir is not attended with the same disadvantages as in the summer; the heat is moderate, the attack of Brigands is the only thing which travellers have to apprehend, but by assembling in troops, they are secured from the pursuit. Even in summer, provided they take care to have a supply of provisions, and to carry water in earthen vessels, or in skins, men accustomed to the temperature of warm climates, perform the journey without inconveniences.

"By following this route Barmaparte will derive many advantages. The march by land is perhaps longer, but it is much more practicable. The whole of the navigation of the Red Sea, to the extent of 100 leagues, which is considered as perilous, would be avoided. Not only would he himself escape its dangers, but likewise the vessels which he expects to meet him would avoid the risk of the voyage, both in going and returning.

"In ancient times Cossir was the grand depot of the commerce of India, and the point of communication between Europe and Asia. The attempt of the conqueror of Italy is in every way hazardous; but upon the whole, the mode which we have pointed out seems to be in every respect as practicable, and in many preferable, to that of crossing the Desert from Cairo to Suez." See vol. 1. of Letters.

WENTY DOLLARS REWARD.
RAN away from the subscriber, on the 13th of June last, a negro fellow named YETK, about forty years of age, five feet ten or eleven inches high, stout made, and has lost some of his upper teeth. He formerly belonged to Governor Caswell, and afterwards to Mr. William White, of Kinston, and is well known in that neighbourhood; he has a wife at Christopher Lawton's, in Duplin county, and has frequently been seen about that place, and on his way to the neighbourhood of Kinston, since he went off. The above reward will be paid to any person, who will bring him to me, or lodge him in any goal, so that I get him again.

BOSTON, Nov. 19.
The answer of the Legislature of Vermont to the Governor's Address, contains all the nerve of Green Mountain Farmers. "The French nation (say they) oppressed by their leaders, and deprived of every thing like constitutional liberty, their object conquest, and their policy plunder, are unqualified from our Envoys, and MAY WE ONLY SPEAK TO THEM FROM THE MOUTHS OF OUR CANNON, until they come to a sense of the injuries they have done us, and a wish to repair them. We feel a national pride, and place full confidence in the valor of our citizens, and our resources."

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.

Extract of a letter from Cadix, September 27, 1798.

"Although Lord St. Vincents still continues on this bay, we see American vessels enter almost every day, and this by permission. It is also certain that the French are very much at a loss what course to steer with respect to the Americans; there have been instances of their system of iniquity being modified in favour of the American prizes, so that at this moment the American flag is more respected than any other. I pray to heaven that the people of America may never relax in supporting the principles of their government, since I now witness the rapid effect it has had to raise the American character in the eyes of poor humbled Europe. Yet I am convinced from good authority that the French still build some hopes on a reviving party in America, and they are very industrious in spreading reports here to that effect—Nay, the very Spanish minister in Paris, has just informed his government here, that the directory had received certain information from America, of the French faction having recovered their superiority, the probability of which I have formally and positively denied. I forbear mentioning my own suspicions concerning my source of this pretended intelligence. It is well known that the infamous Logan, and the weak, ungrateful Kosciuszko, have arrived in Paris. There are two things which I find to be continual objects of mistake among the Europeans in their opinions and judgment of American affairs—First, they never knew how to appreciate the true American interest so that it is almost impossible to make them understand that America may resist French, without submitting to English influence: Secondly, They are almost incapable of forming a just idea of the kind of gratitude which America owes to France on account of her assistance in the late war. On these two topics I have always found it difficult or impossible to argue my opponents into conviction without excepting many men of talents and understanding in other respects. But the spirit of enquiry which is now generally awakened, respecting American affairs will soon place things in their true light.

At present it is supposed that the hero of the grand nation will begin descending the hill of capricious fortune. He is, by all accounts in a very desperate situation at present with his army who are continually harrassed by the natives and must now be in want of every thing, without hopes of communication with the mother country."

NEW-YORK, Nov. 27.

The hand of God appears to have been almost miraculously engaged in the important and decisive victory obtained by the British over the French fleet, in Rosetta bay. Had the action been fought in the open ocean, its destruction would have been no miracle, even by an inferior force but that 12 sail of the line and two frigates should anchor in a close bay, along side of a fleet, carrying 162 guns and 2440 men more than themselves, and completely capture or destroy almost the whole, is a circumstance unparalleled in the naval history of the world. It is a victory which will wait the fame of the gallant commander to every corner of the earth, and rank the name of NELSON, (perhaps admiral lord NELSON) highest in the annals of British valor.—Bath. Fed. Gaz.

All our latest advices from Europe, confirm the former accounts, that the French government wishes to be on good terms with the United States. The friends of America in France, alludge, in vindication of the seizure of American vessels,
