DRAFT BILL Continued from page 1, Sec. 1 into the land or naval forces including aviation units of the United States for the training and service prescribed in subsection (B) if he is acceptable to the land or naval forces for such training or service.

Mr. Ellender: Mr. President, does the Senator from New York feel that there should be mixed units in the Army? "My Wagner: No."

Mr. Wagner: Because I think the Army has unfairly discriminated against one particular race or color. Aided by Senator Tydings, of Maryland, Senator Lister Hill, of Alabama went so far as to "prove" that the amendment would endanger the country's defense forces in the Pacific, because it would prevent the government from keeping, Japan ese Americans, living in Hawaii out of the army.

But it remained for Negro-baiting Tom Connally, of Texas, who is leading the fight against the anti lynching bill, to express the full sentiment of his southern colleagues with the following "If the Senator from New York wants to write into this law a provision that would put colored men and white men in the same company, make them sleep together in the same tent, make them eat together at the same table, why does he not do so? If he were courageous, that is what he would do. If he wanted to insure absolute equality under the law, that is what he would do. But he has not got the courage to do that. He wants to say, 'Why, of course, the colored men can enlist in the army.' They have always been enlisted in the army for years and years and years. Then the Sen. from Texas makes no objection to their enlisting in the army, but he thinks that when any citizen, white or black, comes to his government and asks to serve, he ought to be willing to give up some of his own conveniences and if the army does not have an aviation unit, where he is needed, or where he can serve, he ought not to demand 'You have got to establish an aviation unit for my own special benefit, whether you need it, or whether you do not. Senator Warren Barbour of New Jersey, who had also prepared an anti discrimination amendment to the bill, voted for the Wagner amendment.
