For several reasons Dr. Far-isc., regards his Collection as priceless". It contains at least ne original edition nearly 150 years old, the complete works of several Negro authors, and a number of books autographe by their authors. Moreover, the Colection represents a hobby of more than thirty year's stand-in the field with his hobby of collecting books, Dr. Farrison has published numerous articles about Negroes and Negro litera ture. "My interest in the poetry and prose written by American Negroes," he says," is only one of my special interests and is a part of my general interest in literature. It is essentially the interest of the historian of lite-rature, whose functions, I be-lieve, is , first to inform himself about what has been written, second, to evaluate it in the light of its purpose and merits and third, to consider what are now commonly called its "im-plications", whether social, moral, or otherwise.

The latest addition to Farrison Collection is the first edition of Harriet Beecher Stowe's second novel-Dread; A Tale of the Great Dismal Swamp, Published novel is in two volumes.

Widely regarded as an au thority in Negro literature, Dr. Farrison became interested in the subject while he was a stu-dent at Lincoln University (Pennsylvania) in the early twenties. He began collecting books at Lincoln. Over the years he has had personal contact with many of the authors whose books are in his Collection, including Langston Hugh es, Waring Cuney, William Stanley Braithwaite, and Arna Bontemps. Dr. Farrison taught des Negres, published in Paris Cuney at Lincoln where he was in 1808, the oldest book in the also a schoolmate of Langston Hughes.
