(Continued from Page One) Stainback, sponsor of the segregation bills, was defeated in the Senate when he sought to vote to override the Governor's veto. The bills, invoking "police power," would give the local school board the authority to assign pupils to any school the board might designate. The local bills were introduced after the Senate Calendar Committee tabled a bill containing the same provisions and introduced by Senator Stainback on January 17. This original bill would have applied to the entire state. At public hearings on the bill, 19 white persons spoke in behalf of it. Fifteen Negroes and three white persons spoke against it. Speaking for the NAACP was the Rev. J. F. Grimmett of Nashville, president of the state organization. The Rev. Mr. Grimmett later urged the Governor to veto the local bills and also rallied other organizations to take a stand against the attempt to perpetuate segregation in Tennessee's public schools. Teacher Tenure Change Meanwhile, another bill amending the state teacher tenure law has been introduced. This bill ostensibly designed as an anti-communist measure, would require teachers to sign a loyalty oath. Hidden in the text of the bill is a provision giving local school boards the power and authority to assign teachers to any school they see fit. The bill is now in the Senate Calendar Committee.

Just as Brewer pulled up, Dr. Clyde Luck also drove up. Mrs. Slade assisted by Walter Wooding, Jr. went into the doctor's office. Rodgers walked over and talked to Dr. Clyde Luck. Brewer and Wilson, remained in the car. While waiting for Mrs. Slade and Mr. Wooding to return, a police car drove up behind the Brewer car. Brewer got out of his car, thinking it was a routine check, walked over to the police car and handed them his driver's license. Brewer said, "what is this a routine check? The officers said, "No, we want that boy," meaning Rodgers, who was standing in the car door about to get in. Brewer then asked the officers why they wanted Rodgers in an effort to explain why they were there. One of the officers replied, "I'm not talking to you." Brewer then said, "I'm asking because he is a passenger in my car. I brought him and his lady friend to the doctor's office." Another officer said, "Put him in the car too." Brewer asked, "On what charges?" No one answered. Brewer then told the officers, "I don't want to go to jail because I have just brought my wife home from the hospital and she can't get out of bed and is at home alone." Another police officer put the hand cuffs on one arm Brewer told him that it was too tight and said I will go with you. Brewer then put his hand in back of him so that the officer could not put the other hand cuff on him and at this time stated, I will go with you. A small plain clothes man then pulled out a black jack and then hit at Brewer's head. Brewer threw his arm up and caught the blow. By this time another car load of officers had been called. The small plain clothes man asked one of the other officers

A man got out of the car, (Fred Brewer) and asked what the trouble was and what they were getting ready to do with the man on the sidewalk. They told Brewer that they were going to arrest the man. Brewer told them that they were not going to do anything of the kind. The officers continued to arrest the man. Brewer insisted that they were not going to arrest the man. Brewer was determined that they were not going to arrest the man. They then had to attempt to put Brewer under arrest. Brewer resisted so violently, and was so strong; he had thrown the two officers to the ground. One of them managed to crawl out of his reach and get to a phone box to summon help. Another cruiser was sent with two more officers to help. It took the four men to subdue him and then this was not possible until a black jack was used.

(Continued from Page One) millions of Negroes and whites mourned the passing of the great leader who has done more to force the implementation of democracy in this country than possibly any other single human being of either race. Said Arthur Spingarn, president of the NAACP: "We of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People mourn with a sense of deepest regret the loss of the sudden passing of our beloved friend and leader, Walter White under whose guidance the Association was developed from a small society into its present position as the nation's largest civil rights organization. His daring courage in exposing lynching for the Association began as early as 1918, contributing greatly to the dispelling of that frightful crime and national disgrace. He was a leader in efforts to secure allotment of federal anti-lynching law and other civil rights. Guided in this course by its leadership, the NAACP won for Negroes of the nation the recognition which establishes for all time their birthright and dignity."

Brewer was forced to sleep on the cold cement floor the rest of the night, as there was no bunk, no chair of any kind, no covers, or anything. He was so exhausted from his ordeal he fell asleep. When he awakened the next morning, he was visited by the Jailer whom Brewer asked to call either Lawyer Harvey, Lawyer Wood, Rev. C. C. Harvey or Willie Sutherland. The Jailer called Rev. Harvey who bonded him out. In an effort to get at both sides of the case the Carolina Times contacted by telephone Chief of Police J. C. Garrett of Danville who gave out the following statement: "There isn't a great deal I can tell you about the facts in the case. Two officers in a cruiser were cruising along on South Main Street several nights ago. According to these officers there was a man standing in the street urinating beside an automobile. The man did not stop as the officers approached. The man was asked what the trouble was and he kept right on urinating.
