

"Just what we need—identification tags!" say the Flutz quadruplets of Reidsville, N. C., shown here with their official identification tags authorized by the Federal Civil Defense Administration. These tags, now being distributed nationally by Pet Milk Company under a new plan worked out with Civil Defense, and in cooperation with grocers, are appearing everywhere—but they have a special meaning for the quads, who are so much alike that almost no one can tell "which is which." Since the quads were "Pet Milk babies" and are still thriving on Pet Evaporated Milk, they were among the very first to receive their tags... special delivery, from Pet Milk Company. Shown with one of the posters used by grocers co-operating in the plan, the quads, who will be nine years old in May, are left to right, Alice, Catherine, Louise and Anne.

More Rural Colored Families Obtaining Better Water Supply

WASHINGTON, D. C. A stepped up drive is underway in the South to help rural white and colored families obtain a better water supply. Reports from the State Negro agricultural extension supervisors indicate that more than 5,000 rural colored families sank deep wells and installed electric pumps and pressure water systems in the South last year.

In Mississippi alone, 1,545 such systems were installed by rural colored families. Alabama reports systems for 306 rural families in 29 counties; Georgia, 685; Louisiana, 410; and Virginia, more than 500 last year. The supervisors say the extension of electric power into rural areas accounts for the rapid increase in the sinking of deep wells and installation of electric pumps. Extension agents are pushing the water system effort.

However, in some areas, they say, facilities for testing water to find out whether it is safe for drinking have not kept pace. While adequate free testing services are available in some States, they are limited in others, resulting in long delays and a tendency to neglect having water tested.

Advisory Panel Drafts Safeguards To Reduce Aspirin Accident Hazard

RALEIGH. A special advisory panel to the Federal Food and Drug Administration has made a number of recommendations for tightening up the packaging and distribution of aspirin-containing preparations with an eye toward safeguarding children. It was learned this week. Representatives of all leading producers of aspirin and aspirin-containing preparations concurred in the five-point program drafted in Washington, D. C. which includes a warning label on all packages, uniformity of tablet contents at one and one-fourth grains per dosage unit in the childhood forms, and wider and more effective educational activities to inform physicians, pharmacists, and consumers of the hazards involved in the accidental ingestion of aspirin containing preparations.

FDA Medical Director, Dr. Albert H. Holland, Jr., cited 113 fatal aspirin poisonings in the United States in 1952, including 86 children under five years of age.
