He gave a vivid account of the progress and development of the college, tracing its growth from the original opening at Shaw University in Raleigh in 1891, to its present position of leadership among similar institutions. He paid high tribute to those who had preceded him as presidents of the college. They included: J. O. Crosby, Dr. James B. Dudley and Dr. F. D. Bluford, as well as a number of others who figured prominently in the founding of the institution and a group of former faculty members.

He concluded, "with the cooperation of our fine faculty, and with the enthusiastic and studious efforts of our alert student group and generous support of alumni and others, we face the future in the belief that this college will expand its mission of service to the people of the State".

Shelley B. Caveness, Greensboro attorney and vice-chairman of the trustee board, presided. Others taking prominent roles in the program included: J. M. Martens, dean of faculties and chairman of the committee on arrangements who tendered greetings to the delegates and visitors; Bishop Willis J. King of the Methodist Church, New Orleans, La., area, who delivered the inaugural prayer; Rev. Cleo M. McCoy, director of religious activities at the college and Rev. J. T. Hairston, pastor of the Shiloh Baptist Church, Greensboro, who delivered the invocation and benediction, respectively.

Other persons giving greetings, included: William D. Mason, president of the Student Council, for the students; Dr. John L. Withers, for the faculty; Dr. Alvin V. Blount, Greensboro Budget Bureau, Raleigh, for State officials and Dr. J. H. Purks, director, N. C. Board of Higher Education, for his group.

Other features of the day-long program included: a formal review by the ROTC cadets of the Air Force and Army units at the college; held on the front campus lawn at 3:00 P.M.; an open house of visitors to observe facilities; a concert by the college symphony band and the president's reception held at his residence in the early evening.

Dynamiting-

a 15 inch hole through the floor, sub floor and ceiling of the church's basement.

The church was blasted between eight and 8:30 Monday night, two weeks ago. The charge apparently landed in the center of the main auditorium, reducing two wooden benches to a pile of splinters, overturning the rest and knocking out all of the windows. No one was at the church at the time.

Church officials estimate the damage at a total loss. At the most recent evaluation, the brick veneered structure was valued at $20,000.

Rev. Morris L. Johnson, who has pastored the church for eight years, discounted possibility of internal friction as the cause of the dynamiting. He asserted that his members were very loyal.

Rev. Johnson did reveal, however, that some 25 years ago the church was burned down, apparently arsonists. He said that at the time, there had been expressed some resentment by whites living in the area over the location of the church.

The minister went on to add that there had been no acts of vandalism against the church in recent years.

While attributing the switch primarily to the civil rights issue, Mr. Wilkins noted that other factors, "such as peace and prosperity, had their impact upon colored voters just as they did upon other citizens. Negroes want peace as well as civil rights," he said, "and they are also sharing in the generally high employment level."
