National Figures To Discuss Desegregation Plan At School

MONTEAGLE, TENN. — Leaders from the South and North will meet over the Labor Day week end at the Highlander Folk School near Monteagle, Tennessee, to consider past progress and plan future action in the South's integration struggle. Highlander is celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary with a four day seminar planned around the theme "The South Thinking Ahead". Dean John Thompson, of the University of Chicago's Rockefeller Chapel, will chair the seminar which will meet from August 30 through September 2.

Dr. Thompson, a Protestant minister, and himself a native of Tennessee, has long been an active champion of social justice and equal rights for all. He is a former Highlander staff member, having worked at the preschool while training for the ministry at Louisville Theological Seminary.

Progress reports will be made from such key areas in the South as Clinton, Tennessee; Kolonia Farm, an interracial Christian community in Americus, Georgia; Birmingham, Alabama; and Tallahassee, Florida. Workshops will consider the implications of integration for church groups, educators, trade unions, business and industry, and community and civic organizations.

The conference will conclude the morning of Labor Day with summary addresses by Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association which guided and directed the recent bus protest in Montgomery, Alabama; and Aubrey Williams, publisher of "The Southern Farm and Home", and a former director of the National Youth Administration. Williams will speak on "A New Dealer Looks at the Present", and Dr. King will consider "The Look to the Future."
