HOME-SEWER CAN COVER HERSELF WITH GLORY

By Evelyn Cunningham

It has often been said that a smart, striking cloth coat can hold its own with a lush, expensive fur coat.

Of course, this does not mean that if a lady has a choice between a full-length autumn haze mink coat and a fine black broadcloth coat that she would prefer the cloth number. Naturally, some women just don't like fur coats, but for those who do and cannot afford them, there is no need for grief or apology. A well-made coat of a good fabric can make a mink stole look like Whistler's mother's shawl.

Style and line are big factors in selecting a coat. Before choosing a pattern and shopping for fabric, the home-sewer must ask herself: Is the coat going to be used for dressy or casual (or both) occasions? Must it be roomy enough to wear a suit underneath? Is the style likely to change within a short period? Must the color absolutely be a neutral one?

One of the prime advantages of sewing is that when a decision has to be made about making one type coat or another, both can be made, and usually at a cost less than the price of one bought ready-made. Home-sewing also relieves the problem of having to concentrate on "one good black coat." A lively red coat can be included in the wardrobe, also a muted tweed.

A particularly stunning coat is the double-breasted one (McCall's Pattern No. 5101), designed exclusively for McCall's by Pierre Cardin, the exciting young French designer. Made here in a warm brown wool with a diagonal weave, it has a large, cape-like collar that is shaped by darts and has a slash and bow at either side. The set-in bracelet-length sleeves have darts at the shoulders. Soft pleats on both sides of the coat fall from the shoulder seam at the armhole.

Among the wide variety of fabrics that may be used for this coat are wool broadcloth, ottoman, fleecy, zibeline; or for evening, satin, velveteen, velvet or brocade.

At first glance, the other coat is strictly casual (McCall's Pattern No. 5102). A perennial favorite, year in and out, the polo coat is a standby in any wardrobe. This year, however, polo coats are being seen in rich brocades for evening wear, in heavy satins or velvets. And they are being worn with or without belts.

The sleeves of this coat are cut in one with the back and front and may be turned back to form cuffs. The notched shawl collar is cut in one with the coat fronts. There are pockets in the side seams. This pattern contains only nine pieces and can be made by the home-sewer with little or no experience. An ideal fabric would be camel coating. It can also be made in zibeline, tweed, corduroy, ottoman or wool broadcloth.

Wrapped and tied in the very latest coatways. This pattern, by its very construction, exemplifies the all-American look. Its large, notched collar, its generous lap, its looped belt contribute to the easy look. An ideal coat for sport wear—very much up to date in wide-waisted corduroy, tweed, wool coating. McCall's Pattern #5102. Misses' sizes 10-18. 75¢

For evening, peau de soie, satin or velvet may be used.

Weekly Fashion-Sewing Tip Selecting the right size pattern is an absolute necessity if you want a garment to fit. Pick your pattern size by measurements—not ready-to-wear size.

Pierre Cardin sees the Winter '60 coat with cape-like collar. Here is a double-breasted coat designed exclusively for McCall's. Interest is detail... a large collar is shaped by darts and is slashed on either side, with bow trim. The graceful sleeves are bracelet length and a perfect foil for handsome slashed gloves. The coat back is eased by two soft pleats falling from the shoulders. McCall's Pattern #5101 in Misses' sizes 10-18. $1.00.
