

MRS. JENKINS

Vocational School Educators to Confer in V. I.

NEW YORK—Mrs. Elizabeth G. Jenkins, vice president and chief guidance counselor of the Printing Trades School, 222 Park Avenue South, New York City, will fly to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands to confer with local education officials, educators, and printing trades aspirants.

During her stay she will tell about the lucrative employment opportunities in the printing trades, discuss the accelerated course and modern facilities of her school, and will set aside time for interviews with prospective trainees.

A native of Birmingham, Mrs. Jenkins is a graduate of Alabama Teachers College and Tuskegee Institute, where she earned her teachers certificate. The faculty of her school is comprised of New York State Department of Education licensed vocational instructors.

The school is under the direction of her husband, Edwin G. Jenkins, also formerly of Birmingham, a veteran professional printer and private vocational school administrator, who became director of the school in 1950. He was the first to introduce private vocational instruction in all phases of printing.

Founded in 1906 as the Empire Linotype School by the late Frank Arnold, the Printing

Trades School and one other are the only private printing trades schools in the United States. The other was founded by Jenkins in 1948 and administered by him as the first complete printing trade school in

Virginia Eastern Star Cited For Aid to Program of Health

LAWRENCEVILLE, Va. — In recognition of its contributions to health research now totaling $44,000, the Grand Chapter of the Virginia Order of the Eastern Star has just received a plaque of appreciation from the National Foundation for Arthritis and Birth Defects.

The latest annual grant by the fraternal order, associated with the Prince Hall Masons, was $3,500. It was presented Tuesday night (July 27th) during the opening public session of its 64th annual convention held here on the campus of St. Paul's College.

Receiving the gift for the foundation was a national representative, Charles H. Bynum of New York City. He in turn presented the plaque to the Virginia organization's grand worthy matron, Mrs. Louise C.

Brown of Portsmouth. The women fraternalists' check was presented by Mrs. Otelia L. Jackson of Charlottesville, grand worthy secretary.

When the National Foundation's project was the treatment and immunization against polio, and the March of Dimes became a landmark fund-raiser, the Virginia OES women made an initial gift of $2,000 in 1949. Each year since the donation has been increased by $100.

Bynum told the 560 registered delegates and patrons from the male branch of the organization that 24 other state chapters, taking their cue from the Old Dominion group, now make similar annual contributions.

In addition to the adult delegates, approximately 175 members of the order's youth department arrived for the final session of the three-day gathering and their meeting was the principal Thursday afternoon activity before adjournment.

Do you want to have a wonderful trip? You can be sure to have the very best by wearing a coat or suit. The best-dressed women do. World-wise travelers do. It's the secret of poise, of being able to beat the weather and of knowing you're appropriately dressed for any adventure.

Nowadays, we cover such long distance in so little time and in such changeable weather that coats and suits are a passport to comfort. Cool? Wear both a suit or coat. Warm? just a suit. Warmer? Take off your suit jacket and show your pretty blouse. Naturally, as a well-dressed traveler, you wouldn't think of leaving shore without a coat on your arm—no matter how the weather is behaving on the day of departure.

Knowledgeable American women pride themselves on presenting the most elegant image abroad as possible. That's why they buy new fashions when they travel. My travel tip for elegance is to plan in advance and buy your coat and suit a few weeks in advance. Wear them at least one before you depart. You'll be sure to take the proper accessories if you "dress rehearsal."

The thing that makes a suit your best travel mate is that it is welcomed everywhere. It is good etiquette to wear it to lunch... to window shop... to sightsee. Even to cocktails and dinner with after-dark ac-

OFF TO AFRICA—John H. Lucas, principal of Hillside High School, is shown boarding the airplane for Ethiopia to attend the World Assembly of the Teaching Profession.

WCOTP is a confederation of the educational leaders of organizations of the teaching profession in eighty countries dedicated to the improvement of the teaching profession and the promotion of international understanding.

The Assembly of World Delegates will explore the general theme: "Equal Opportunity Through Education" in daily sessions at Africa Hall, Addis Ababa. The officers are Sir Ronald Gould, England, president; S. Natarajara, India, vice president; and Dr. William G. Carr, United States, Secretary General.

Principal Lucas will return to the United States next week.

cessories. A suit is a boon because it travels light... and because you can change its character with blouses, shirts, sweaters, scarves and jewelry. Two sets of accessories make good fashion sense. One in the same tones of the suit; the other, contrasting. You become your own magician, giving yourself a world of variety and your suit several personalities. Dress your suit or coat up or down for formal or casual occasions. Wear a suit with pearls and no blouse—or with blouse and pearls, if you prefer, depending on the neckline of your jacket. When traveling, the night air becomes your valet. Just hang your suit near an open window and creases will disappear while you sleep.
