Woman Brutally Blackjacked By Constable

Miss Hampton Suffers Bruises From Attacker

Durham's first case of police brutality in several years was disclosed here this week when the Carolina Times was informed that a constable had blackjacked a Negro woman in the head to the extent that she blacked out and was finally taken to the hospital for examination and observation by her neighbors.

According to the report as told a representative of the Carolina Times by Miss Lillian Hampton, the victim of the attack, Constable Eugene Evans came to her home, 1317 Glenn Street, on September 16 while she was ill in bed to serve a claim and delivery paper on her for some household furniture which she had put up for a loan with the U. F. Wilson Finance Company, located at 103 1/2 W. Parrish Street. Miss Hampton stated that when she heard the knock at the door she told the person to come in only to discover that it was an officer of the law.

When she inquired of the officer what he wanted she stated that Evans entered and informed her of the claim and delivery paper he had and started toward her kitchen located in the rear of the house. Miss Hampton stated she told him not to go into her kitchen and to get out of her house. She stated that when she told Evans to get out of her house that he replied, "You go to hell, I don't give a damn." She stated when she protested further and informed him that she had mailed a $5.00 money order to the Finance Company as payment on the balance of $37.50 she owed on the debt, and protested him rambling through her house, Constable Evans struck her on the back of her head with his blackjack which dazed her to the extent she had to be ministered to by neighbors. Miss Hampton stated she finally blacked out and was rushed to the hospital where it was discovered she was badly bruised but not seriously injured.

In a hearing of the case in Recorder's Court here September 22 before Judge W. C. Purcell Evans was found "not guilty" of an assault charge sworn out against him by Miss Hampton.

Second Attack Made Within Ninety Days

LAUREL, Miss.—For a second time within 90 days shots have been fired into the home of Dr. B. E. Murph, president of the NAACP branch in this southeastern Mississippi city. No one was injured in either instance.

Following the blast, Dr. Murph was notified that the insurance on his home was being cancelled. He is facing difficulty in securing new insurance.

The civil right's leader's home was first fired upon by a shotgun blast on June 15. The attack was repeated the night of Sept. 15 when five shots smashed a large picture window, and windows in two other rooms.

In each instance, it is believed that the shots were fired from a passing car. Local police investigated and the FBI notified.

Who is Boston Celtics Highest Scoring Ace?

RALEIGH—Who is the Boston Celtics highest scoring single-season player? Bill Russell? Bob Cousy? Bill Sharman?

Wrong. Former North Carolina College ace Sam Jones holds that distinction, after scoring 2,070 regular season points for an average of 25.9 per game last year.

Ever since Jones found himself in his second year as a pro, he has succeeded in stealing the limelight just when the going was toughest. The ability to come through when the chips are down is a Jones trademark.

Jones will be making one of his rare North Carolina appearances when he plays in the North Carolina Pro Basketball Classic, here in Reynolds Coliseum, Oct. 6 and 7. Sam played sensationally See BASKETBALL 2A
