Social Workers Urge Defined Service Aid

Chapter of the National Association of Social Workers, Inc., at their monthly meeting at the Research Triangle, voted unani-mously to urge the State Board of Public Welfare to include the aged and the disabled in the program of Defined Services in public welfare in North Carolina. Defined Services, now limited to recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children refers to limiting caseloads of public welfare workers to sixty families with a supervisor for every five coseworkers. Adoption of this plan also entitles welfare departments to greater amounts of federal matching funds.

The State Board of Public Welfare will consider in February whether the Defined Services Program will be extended to the categories of Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disable and Old Age Assitance. Public welfare caseloads in some areas are as high as three and four hundred families, according to a spokeman for the organization of professional soworkers. "It is not possible to extend the services to maintain minimum standards of health and decency when a single worker is expected to help so many families. Welfare recipients, the poorest of the poor, are best by the many social, psysical, and emotional which accompany poverty. We believe the community has an obligation to help its less fortunate members, and the Defined Services program offers a unique optist Convention, comprising 400 portunity towards the fulfillment of this obligation' Carl C. Staley, Jr., Chairman of the Chapter, informed the State Board of Public Welfare of the action of the group, in a letter to Board Chairman Robt. V. Howison, Jr. "It is our considered opinion that adoption of defined services for adults would mean essentially that through reducing caseloads to a maximum of sixty cases and providing closer, more effectsupervision, caseworkers will have the opportunity, the time, and the guidance and direction needed to provide constructive services of a preventive, rehabilitative, and protective nature to our adult citizens," said Staley in the letter. "We believe that this is an excellent opportunity for the North Carolina State Board of Public Welfare to enhance its long tradition of providing outstanding leadership and con in terms of world travel," Dr. cern for our disadvantaged citizens, and hope that your Board zens, and hope that your Board will endorse this needed step forward to strengthen Public Welfare Services in North Car-
