STATE COLLEGE, Miss. — Aaron Henry, Mississippi state president of the NAACP, became the first Negro in the 80-year history of Mississippi State University here to address a student body when he appeared recently before an integrated audience of more than 700 persons.

Mr. Henry told the group that he feels "the destiny of both communities, Negro and white, is wrapped together. If Mississippi is to advance, then they must work together."

Moreover, he said, he feels today "a new wind blowing—a wind that will sound frightening to some because it will blow away their evil system. However, if we join hands, then we can go forward."

Asked to comment on his feelings on being the first Negro to address the student body, he commented, "I have been on quite a few campuses all over the country, and this is one of the warmest receptions I have ever gotten."

Editorializing on the NAACP leader's appearance here, the student publication, "The Reflector" said:

"Aaron Henry's appearance here Tuesday night is vivid proof of the changes—particularly in attitude—that have taken place in Mississippi since 1962. His appearance here was a landmark in itself, but not only that, the surprisingly large audience was, amazingly gracious and responsive."

Former NCC Coach Wins 500th Basketball Game

By BILL NICHOLS

The first 500 basketball victories are the hardest.

And the next 500 could be twice as hard if this essay was about anyone but John McLendon.

McLendon coached his 500th collegiate basketball triumph last Wednesday when he guided Cleveland State to a 4-22 decision over Walsh College.

And don't be surprised if you read in years to come about him winning his 1000th cage contest. The man breeds winning and this lifetime of success is certain to lift CSU to greater basketball heights than it has ever known.

"I'll remember my 500th victory forever," McLendon said yesterday. "I teach fast break basketball and our team scored just 24 points—it was unbelievable.

"I won my first college game back in 1940 at North Carolina College. It was my first game as head coach and we beat Hampton Institute, 59-40. We scored more points in that game, 27 years ago, than both teams did Wednesday."

McLendon can only recall one other low scoring game in which his team was involved. In 1969 his Tennessee State club which had a 30-1 record that year, downed Rockhurst College, 31-17. Tennessee had a 12-11 edge at halftime.

McLendon has tutored others who have gone on to professional cage greatness—two of who are Sam Jones of the Boston Celtics and Tex Harrison, long time Harlem Globetrotter. See McLENDON page 2A
