J. R. Woodward Named Asst. Dir. EEOC Program

RALEIGH—J. Richard Woodward of Durham, has been named as Assistant Director of a special Equal Employment Opportunities Commission job-training program which will be conducted under the leadership of the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council.

The program, provided by a contractual grant from the EEOC office to the Governor's Good Neighbor Council, will concentrate primarily in five industrial areas involving some fifteen counties which are heavily populated with Negroes and other minorities. The total minority population in these areas is estimated at more than 400,000.

Woodward, an AME Zion Minister, has served as pastor of the Clinton Chapel AME Zion Church in Pollockville since November, 1965. Prior to ministerial duties at Pollockville, he served the Kesler Temple AME Zion Church in Henderson from 1963 to 1965, and was minister of the Centennial AME Zion Church at Bear Creek from 1959 to 1962. Also, he has served AME Zion Churches in Cheraw, South Carolina and Chesterfield, S. C.

In addition to his ministerial duties, Woodward served as a member of the faculty of Jones High School, Trenton, from July '66 to August '67. He worked as a distributive education coordinator at Durham's Hillside High School during the school term 1965-66 where he conducted classes in marketing, salesmanship, and other related courses, and also placed students for on-the-job training programs.

Since February 1962, Woodward has compiled several years of intermittent experience as a

Oakwood Park-S. Hillside Community Residents to Meet

The first fall meeting of the residents of Oakwood Park-South Hillside community will be held Monday, September 25, at Fayetteville Street School at 7:30 p.m.

Problems affecting this neighborhood will be discussed. In order to know how to cope with these problems, we are asking that husbands and wives attend this meeting.

We have been successful in solving a number of problems, but more remain. Your presence at this gathering will add strength to our efforts.

A&T Students To House Six Wisconsin U.

GREENSBORO — "A grand experience" is the way A&T State University student George C. Thompson described the University's current exchange program with the University of Wisconsin.

Thompson, a mechanical engineering student from Mebane, and five other A&T undergraduates will spend the fall semester studying at the mid-western University.

The exchange program, under which several Wisconsin students will also study at A&T, was made possible by an $80,420 Federal Grant.

The cooperative program between A&T and the University of Wisconsin also provides for faculty study, special lectures and consultants for the Engineering and Nursing schools.

Thompson said he was pleased with the opportunity to take part in the program.

"A lot of the instructors there have written books which we have studied, and now I will get a chance to get first hand experience."

"I'm also looking forward to making the trip," said Japhet Nkonge, an economics major from Kenya, East Africa. "It should be quite an experience because we will be going from a predominately-Negro institution to a predominately-white one."

The other students taking part in the exchange program are Benjamin Tabourne, sophomore history major from Philadelphia, Miss Mary Ann Barnes, junior political science major from Washington, D. C.; James Jones, junior engineering physics major from Portsmouth, and Miss Virginia Cofield, sophomore home economics major from Windsor.
