Peru Plans Takeover of US Holdings

LIMA —The Peruvian government announced Tuesday it will expropriate all major land tracts now privately owned and divide them among the people, including vast lands owned by such U.S. investors as the W. R. Grace Co. and New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

President Juan Velasco Alvarado promised "just compensation" for all land holders, both foreign and Peruvian, whose properties will be turned over to the peasantry under an agrarian land reform of unprecedented scope.

Velasco announced the general objectives of the land reform program that will effect untold millions of dollars worth of U.S.-owned as well as Peruvian-held property in a nationwide television address.

His voice repeatedly broke with emotion. His immediate audience at the presidential palace interrupted his speech throughout with applause and rising shouts of "Bravo" and "Viva Land reform!"

The land reform law, Velasco said, "will be applied throughout the country, without privileges and with no exceptions."

"Only in this manner will a coherent agricultural development be possible."

This made it clear all of the major U.S. investors in Peru would feel the bite of the reform law, a development which swept far beyond even the most pessimistic predictions of diplomatic observers here.

The action furthered a trend of expropriation begun last October by Velasco's military regime. At that time, Peru took over the properties of the U.S.-owned International Petroleum Co. without the compensation offered in Tuesday's announcement. That expropriation provoked a crisis in diplomatic relations with the United States which still is unresolved.

Among the U.S. firms standing to be hit hardest by the new law is the W. R. Grace and Co. of New York City. Grace has varied interests in Peru but under the land seizure it apparently will lose only its vast sugar plantations at Paramonga and Cartavio.

Drug Use Is Hinted In Death

LONDON —Scotland Yard pathologists Monday performed an autopsy on the body of Judy Garland and sources said incomplete preliminary findings indicated the singer-actress may have died from an overdose of drugs.

The 47-year-old Miss Garland was found dead on the bathroom floor of her London home early Sunday by her fifth husband. The London Evening News said a box of pills was found near her body.

A family spokesman said Miss Garland's husband, Mickey Deans, would accompany the body to New York by plane Wednesday for funeral services probably on Friday.

Scotland Yard sources said further detailed tests on several body organs were being carried out by the pathologists after the autopsy, apparently failed to determine the cause of death on visual examination.

The sources indicated the tests performed thus far excluded these: dose when drugs are injected; one such test is a complex blood analysis.

Await Inquest

An official spokesman for Scotland Yard would say only that the findings would not be disclosed until a coroner's inquest is held on Wednesday. The Yard sources, who disclosed the suspicion that drugs may have been involved, emphasized "it is absolutely impossible to say if such an overdose was either accidental or otherwise." Scotland Yard reported earlier that no suicide notes were found.

Scotland Yard refused comment on a London newspaper report Miss Garland was thought to have obtained 100 sleeping tablets from a local druggist Saturday. The Evening News said a box containing 50 pills was found near her body but did not identify the pills.

An official Yard spokesman said, "Some tablets were taken from the house but they were not found beside the body. They will not be examined unless the autopsy indicates a drugs factor."

"If all the formalities are completed in time, her husband will fly from London Wednesday with the body. If he does, the funeral will probably be in New York on Friday," said Brian Southcombe, Miss Garland's press spokesman.

BMI—You brag about your ability to judge people by their dress. What about that little blonde over on the beach?
SN—Insufficient evidence.
