Dr. Loving Tells A&T Audience That Equal Opportunity Nears

GREENSBORO — The first black full professor at the University of Michigan predicted last Tuesday night that by the year 2,000 "equality of opportunity will be a way of life in the United States."

Dr. Alvin D. Loving, Sr., a professor of education since 1956, was the initial speaker on the third annual summer lecture-lyceum series at A&T State University.

Addressing nearly 200 students, faculty and persons from the community, Loving said:

"As one looks at the American scene, it seems foolhardy to be optimistic, but either you have faith in mankind or you don't."

"People have said 'give us 100 years and we will solve our differences,' added Loving. "We no longer have 100 years."

Loving said he detects in this nation substantial concern about the social problems.

"If we were not concerned," he noted, "we would not have been involved in the kind of dialogue that produced the Kerner Report. This report is not an end in itself, but it is a part of the dialogue."

Loving said he has also been encouraged by the rising concern being shown by government, the churches and such groups as the Chambers of Commerce in the various cities.

He said that both the educational and technological advances in this country have produced the knowledge for solving social and economic problems.

"We have developed all of the human relations skills to help us understand people. Why can't we feed what we know into a computer and chart a happy existence for all?"

Loving said change will not come easily, but that one route to change will be quality education. He noted that in the past there has been neglect in mentioning in books the contributions of certain minorities, but added that many college and schools are now offering integrated courses.

Jersey NAACP Launches Full-Scale Drive for Quality Schools

NEW YORK — Through a combination of efforts coordinated by the Education Department of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, a massive statewide campaign has been launched in New Jersey to eliminate educational inequalities throughout the state's schools.

The NAACP drive, which will draw upon the resources of all of Jersey's 41 branches, is being coordinated by Mrs. Irene Smith, president of the New Jersey NAACP State Conference of Branches, and W. Burghardt Turner, recently appointed National Office education field staff representative.

In a press conference in Newark, Wednesday, June 11, Mrs. Smith stressed the importance of the campaign saying "The long hot summer started last month. NAACP people are not going to continue to be firemen."

Turner, who is also an assistant professor at New York State University in Stony Brook, L. I., announced plans to meet with State Education Commissioner Carl Marburger to demand that the state order changes in local school operations.

The NAACP's drive is targeted to eliminate all segregation and provide special help for the disadvantaged. Goals include black studies programs at all levels, open to all students; appointment of more Negroes to school boards and administrative positions, and more judicious handling of student unrest by school officials. Plans call for three regional meetings of the state's branches.

Speaking on behalf of the NAACP, from the National Office, Miss June Shagaloff, education director, said, "These preparatory meetings will prime the pumps for a one-day meeting in July of all the state's branches to determine feasible legal actions. Through the entire drive, we will stress the importance of local volunteers meeting with local school officials and boards of education."

"Tribute To The Clergy"

Because our contacts with the clergymen of our community are frequent and varied, we must admit that we have sometimes been guilty of taking their selfless devotion for granted. May we at the Scarborough and Hargett Funeral Home at this time express our appreciation for the many gracious services they render without complaint and often with little or no reward.
