Two Kinds of Justice in North Carolina

Every citizen of North Carolina who has an ounce of character or decency should read the article, "still Waiting," which appeared in the July 31 issue of the News And Observer of Raleigh. The article was about the five young Negro boys being held in prison as the result of a 12-year sentence handed them after they pleaded guilty to setting fire to a Ku Klux Klan meeting hall in Benson. Total damage resulting from the incident amounted to less than $100.

Disclosure of the facts surrounding this most unfortunate sentence imposed on the five young boys by Judge William Y. Bickett, the presiding magistrate in the case, reveal that the young Negroes are no hardened criminals but school boys with a previously good record and reputation. Thus Judge Bickett has established a precedent, the result of which will be watched with relentless diligence by Negro leaders of this state in the years aread.

In its article of Thursday, July 31, the "Still Waiting" article said in

"Governor Scott has extended mercy, in the form of executive clemency, to a wealth Rockingham County businessman convicted of receiving stolen building materials and represented in his clemency appeal by a law firm with unusually close ties to the governor.

The wisdom of gubernatorial action in that matter remains to be seen. But the very fact that Governor Scott did act only makes more inexcusable with every passing day the imprisonment of five young Negroes who did minor damage to a Ku Klux Klan hut near Benson when they set fire to it in April, 1968.

Like the businessman, these young Negroes had never been in trouble with the law before. Unlike the business man, they not only received active sentences but 12-year sentences-cruel and unusual punishment by any definition save that of state law as interpreted by the State Supreme Court. And unlike the businessman, these five youths have yet to be aided by the governor."

That Governor Scott has failed thus far to exercise the power of his office and extend executive clemency to the five Negro youths by releasing them under probation or reducing their penalties to fines, will not soon be forgotten by the growing mass of Negro voters in North Carolina. He and Judge Bickett may rest assured that should they ever become candidates for public office in the future that their political fate will stand in supreme jeopardy so far as the Negro vote is concerned.

Both Scott and Bickett have proved conclusively that the pattern in North Carolina is to apply one kind of punishment to Negro offenders of the law and another to white. Thus it appears that the two high state officials have entered into a conspiracy with the Ku Klux Klan to prevent Negroes from receiving equal rights before the courts and elsewhere in

Mrs. Chisholm Says

Ballot Can Create True Black Power

WASHINGTON - Congresswoman Shirley Chis-holm has called for blacks and other minorities to create a new breed of revolutionary politicians based on an alignment of all the disadvantaged groups in Amer-

Addressing the annual pre-convention luncheon of the Council of Urban League Guilds at the Sheraton Park hotel, the fiery lawmaker from Brooklyn who is the first black woman to be elected to Congress said there must be a slowdown of the space program long enough to catch up with the gap in the needs of the peo-ple here on Earth. Criticicizing the black capitalism program as another gimmick, Mrs. Chis-holm asked for the Urban League and other organiza-tions to become involved in political action programs to harness human resources, such as massive voter registration drives and voter education. Contrary to popular belief, she said it is not the people in the ghetto who are apathetic, but political leaders, both black and white, who are apa-thetic to what is going on. The man in the street 'massively a ware' that there is no concern for his problems, so he stays away from the ballot box in massive droves.

Two commitments, one to a re-ordering of the pres-ent priorities at the local, state and national and two, a dedication to the belief that new priorities must be based on what is best for all humanity will convince the rank and file poor people that there is something of value in political participation, she said.

Unused Power
The most under-utilized source of political power in the country is Blacks and Puerto Ricans in the North and East, Blacks and Cubans in the South, Blacks and Chicanos (Mexican Americans) in the South and West, Mrs. Chisholm

Upper and middle class black people and black leaders in particular must do more than grow Afros and wear a dashikis and eat soul food, she said. They must leave the board rooms of the Urban League, the NAACP, CORE, SNCC and SCLC and go with the people, she advised. In return, Mrs. Chisholm said, boards of these and other organizations must bring in to their member ships young people—youth, 15, 16 and 17, to meet the styles and needs of the 70's and the 80's.

"The only way to reach these youth is by going to them honestly and openly expressing our needs and pot with patented planned pet with patented programs for them," seh said. youngsters can be the spearhead of the thrust for new revolutionary political

As far as that trip is concerned now is the time to repeat a chant that was quite popular among young people a few years ago. Hell No— We won't go," Mrs. Chisholm said.

Favors Ballot Quoting the late Malcolm X who advocated the ballot and the bullet, Mrs. Chisholm said the second course is unacceptable to her because she believes the goals of this Social Revolution must be the preservation of human resources, human potential and human life. That leaves only the ballot. But the politics that the ballot symbolizes cannot and will not be successful as a tool of the present So-cial Revolution if we allow them to remain the politics of the last 200 years. The one must change if there is to be a revolution of the hu-man spirt and our politi-way of life," Mrs. Chis-holm concluded. With the theme of Ghetto Power in Action, the 1969 National Urban League Conference got under way with a record attendance. Miss Anne Tanneyhill, convention coordinator, said an unprecedented 1,400 persons were pre-registered, and there are 142 exhibitors, up from 52 last year. Twothirds of them are commer ture. cial exhibits, signifying the intense interest in black awareness that has sprung

Security For All

COUNTRY that can land a man on the moon can't A afford to tolerate poverty at home. Now that we've accomplished what seems to have been the nation's top priority for the decade — the space effort — it's time to turn our attention earthward.

The new priority for the country should be the elimination of poverty from the face of the land and economie The Urban League, at its annual conference in Washington this week, has come up with an economic security plan that would accomplish this. It includes a number of steps, each designed to take groups of poor people out of the poverty that haunts them. The aged, for example, can escape the clutches of deprivation simply through expanded social security coverage and Three out of four people live in families the head of which works all or part of the time. Higher minimum wages, broader coverage, and guaranteed public service jobs and training can remove them from the ranks of the nearly 30 million poor people.

But in many ways, the cornerstone of our program is the proposal for family allowances that would give each child in America $40 per month as a matter of right.

15 Million Poor Children

Nearly 15 million children live in poor families. More than half of all black youngsters are growing up poor. But most poor kids are white. A family allowance program would take their families out of poverty.

Since every child would get the allowance, there would be no degrading means test. And others, besides the poor, would also feel its benefits. A great impact would be on families that aren't statistically speaking, poor but do suffer some degree of economic strain. That's the moderate income group - people who make under $8,000 a year for a family of four.

This is the group that is too often neglected. They pay more taxes, proportionately, than others. And often they find they can't clothe or school their kids adequately.

Many of the so-called "white backlashers" are found in this group. They're bitter because they hear so much about poverty, yet they feel poor themselves and feel no one cares about their problems. A family allowance plan that benefits this group could raise living standards while at the same time reduce racial tensions caused by economic competition.

Since the allowances would be taxable, higher income groups would return most of the grants in taxes.

It's a workable program, one that would have widerange effects. More than sixty countries around the world, including many that are usually considered "underdeveloped" and poor, have some form of family allowance scheme. In this, as in other social developments, America

One Objection Often Heard

One objection sometimes heard is that parents wouldn't use the money to benefit their kids. The experience of other countries doesn't support this judgment. When Canada in-augurated its plan, sales of children's shoes doubled in the

Even if the money isn't all used specifically for shoes or dentist's bills, kids will benefit. If a family could now afford a better house or a more varied diet, or even if family worries about money are eased, the children will

Others fear it, will encourage people to have children. That's another myth. No one has children just to collect a $40 monthly check; kids will always cost more than that. It's been proved that the higher a family's income, the fewer children they're apt to have. Some countries, like France, started a family allowance program hoping it would raise the birth rate. But they've been disappointed; the rate actually fell.

At a time when the nation is trying to patch the holes in a leaky and degrading welfare system it ought to be replacing, steps should be taken to launch the economic security program that would end poverty and boost every-one's living standard. And a family allowance plan is a good cornerstone for such a system.

Beauty Of Pronounciation

In the U.S., three spoken dialects are acceptable: the General American, the Southern, and the so-called New England (known by other names as well). The General American is spoken by the majority of the best educated people.

Thus, pronunction is best when it is most easily understood, and the pronunciation is most readily understood when most people use it in

A RADIO announcer, for instance, should use the pronunciation that is spoken by the majority of the educated ople of the area served by people of the the station.

The announcers for CBS, for example, reach a wide audience across the entire nation. Hence, they should use a pronunciation that is readily understood by the majority of the listeners. In such a case, the announcer would do well to use a pronunciation widely known among phoneticians as "General American."

IT SHOULD be added that this is the pronunciation found in the best American English dictionaries.
