

National Dental Association in Cincinnati for 56th Convention

Dr. James A. Holley III New NDA President

Members of the National Dental Association, several hundred strong, convened the week of August 4 in Cincinnati, Ohio, for their 56th annual convention.

Highlighting the meeting was a series of seminars and discussions on providing better dental care for a growing population. Dentists from all parts of the United States, many accompanied by wives and children, attended the predominately Negro association's convention.

In conjunction with the convention were annual meetings of the Dental Assistants and Dental Hygienists. Dental schools of both Howard University and Meharry Medical College also sponsored programs for their alumni.

Included in the week-long meetings were scientific presentations dealing with such topics as "Treating the Chronically Ill and Aged," "The Child Patient," "Federal Funded Dental Programs," "Dental Health Education for the Public," "Modern Concepts in Periodontics," "Immediate Denture Techniques"; and numerous table clinics in areas of dental specialties.

The Cincinnati Convention marked the 56th time the Association had gathered to discuss their profession and review new developments in dental care. A recurring theme during the meeting was greater relevancy to the times and greater service to the community.

The Dental Association also stepped up its program in recruiting of Negro youth into dentistry and formally structured a student recruiting program supported in part by The Coca-Cola Company of Atlanta, Georgia, which also provides scholarship aid for students interested in dentistry.

Among the convention highlights were the messages by Dr. James C. Wallace, out-going NDA President; Dr. Harold Hillenbrand, Executive Director of the American Dental Association; and Ralph Abernathy of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Dr. James A. Holley, III was installed as President of the National Dental Association. Dr. Holley, whose practice is in Portsmouth, Virginia; has served as an NDA Trustee and is a City Councilman in Portsmouth.

Dr. F. T. Hunter, Ft. Lauderdale; Dr. James Black, Plainfield, N.J.; and Dr. James C. Wallace, out-going NDA President, are seen with other dentists who went through convention registration lines.

The Coca-Cola Company helped make the meetings go better by providing refreshments. Department of Commerce representative Jerry S. Cooper of the U.S. Department of Commerce was among convention visitors to the booth for Coca-Cola and Fresca.

SCLC President Ralph Abernathy was a luncheon speaker at the NDA Convention. Here he is shown with Dr. C. O. Simpkins (center), NDA Civil Rights Committee Chairman, and Dr. James C. Wallace, out-going NDA President.

NDA members attend conventions to secure knowledge of new equipment and techniques to aid them in providing the best dental care. Here Detroit dentists Richard Randolph and Leon Stein examine one of many new instruments displayed at the convention by scientific exhibitors.

Younger Set scores of youngsters accompanied their parents to the convention.

Community affairs and recruitment were prominent discussion areas.
