Durham School Chosen From 155 United States Nominations

Durham city's Cooperative School for Pregnant Girls has recently been named the North Carolina recipient of a national Innovative Project Award given by the President's National Advisory Council on innovative programs in education. The Durham project was ore of 42 ESEA Title III projects in the U.S. to receive the award.

Title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 provides federal funds to local school units to promote experimentation and innovation within the schools, according to Edwin L. West, Director of the Division of Development for the State Education Agency. Thirty-seven new projects have recently been funded in North Carolina and will begin operation July

The Cooperative School, directed by Mrs. Maurine La-Barre and Mrs. Shirley Millis, has been in operation since 1968 in the Southside School at 2038 Erwin Road. The purpose of the school, according to Durham City School Superintendent Lew W. Hannen, is to continue the education of married and unmarried high school girls who become pregnant before graduation.

The project meets a grow ing need in the State's educational system, said West, and is unique in that the curriculum offers not only academic subjects, but also such classes as health, baby care, planned parenthood, and arts and crafts, added West.

Further he stated that Lewis will not have to teach physical education classes. This is important as it means Lewis can give full time to building character and influencing young men, which is really what athletics is all about.

Lewis, 24 and a bachelor, is a native of Alexandria, Virginia. He attended and was graduated from West Virginia University. Waters was coach of the Mountainers during 1966-67-68 and knew Lewis during those days. Lewis was hampered by several knee operations and a broken foot while at West Virginia. His courage in overcoming these obstacles are to be commended. Lewis received a degree in Journalism and public relations in 1968.

Lewis worked briefly with the Chrysler Corporation in the field of management. In 1969 he joined the staff of Tennessee State and helped guide the freshman to a 13-3 season. Lewis also earned the Master's Degree in Education while at Tennessee State. He worked during 1970 at Gannon College in Erie, Pa. as top better line of communication with the citizens of the Crest Street community the executive committee of the Durham Branch, NAACP, will meet with many of them at 7:30 p.m., Monday.

The Rev. L. W. Reid, a member of the committee and pastor of New Bethel Baptist Church, located across the street from the Crest Street School agreed to call such a meeting, in the hope that people in the area might be given an opportunity to help in establishing the proposed Day-Care Center in the school.

The opening of the center has been delayed by many things from the signing of the lease, giving the NAACP the rights to operate in the school to damages to the building fixtures and equipment that could go as high as $10,000.

was much feeling about the abandonment of the school when busing of school children went into effect.

Some of this resentment was evidenced by the fact that most of the glass in the windows was smashed and minor damages inflicted to the building. Resentment was also shown in the fact that there were slogans and names printed or written on the building. This base of an extensive care program, involving children of working mothers and mothers themselves.

Recent vandalism has caused much concern and the Monday night meeting is being called to acquaint the people of the community with the program that will be carried on. It will also ask that (See RESIDENTS 8A)

India Cooke to Visit Italy For

India Merle Cooke, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. David B. FORMER RALEIGH PHYSICIAN TO Jr., leaves Monday, June 14, for Siena, Italy for the Summer Program of the North Carolina School of the Arts.

The program, now in its fifth year was conceived by Dr. Vittorio Giannini, the first President of the School of the Arts, and organized through the support of the ten Italian Foreign Minister, Amintori Fanfani, and Dr. Danilo Verzili, President of the Accademia Musicale Chigiana.
