Nixon Is Tearing Down Law Of Land ... Wilkins

Wallace Says He's Assisting The President

NEW YORK — "The President is indirectly responsible for tearing down the law of the land," NAACP Executive Director Roy Wilkins said on August 12 after Mr. Nixon threatened to fire Administration personnel who sought to impose busing upon children beyond the minimum required by law. "The personal attitude of the President ... emboldened Governor George Wallace to order an Alabama school board to ignore a Federal Court order," Mr. Wilkins said. This forceful, direct language was contained in a telegram sent to the President after the Alabama governor ordered the Birmingham Board of Education to ignore a Federal desegregation order and reassign a white girl to a school closer to home. In issuing his order, Mr. Wallace said that he was "assisting" the President.

Mr. Wallace threatened to issue additional orders along the same lines and said that they will involve entire schools rather than a single child. (See NIXON page 9A)

The FCD proposal to Ford states that the Durham foundation will follow essentially the same format as in 1970, operating programs throughout North Carolina for economic development, leadership development and legal and social research.

Ford's grant letter stipulates that FCD will use the $442,000 primarily for administration, economic development. FCD is to seek other support for the bulk of its legal and social research program.

FCD's economic development program, as described in its proposal to Ford, is an attempt to foster corporations and ventures owned and controlled by groups of low-income people in various North Carolina communities. Among FCD's specific objectives during the current program year are:

- Establishing new community-based economic development corporations in High Point, Raleigh, Rocky Mount and Wilson - and establishing an operating business venture in at least one of these places.

NEW YORK — Mrs. Martin Luther King, Jr., widow of the assassinated civil rights leader, today urged the members of the Women's Liberation Movement not to become "bitter or vindictive" if they hope to succeed in their fight for equality.

In an interview published in the current issue of Redbook magazine, just released, Mrs. King suggested that Women's Lib look toward the Black woman for inspiration in combating the oppression which exists against women today.

"The Black woman has a special role to play," she declared. "Our heritage of suffering and our experience in having to struggle against all odds to raise our children gives us a greater capacity for both suffering and understanding. This has enlarged our ability to be compassionate. We have, I think a kind of stamina, a determination, which makes us strong."
