

Italian Tourists to Visit China

MILAN, Italy — Umberto Melotti, editor of a political magazine, wanted to go for "work and study."

Renata Pisu, who went to school there, wanted to return for "sentimental" reasons.

Renato Musaccio, a south Italian doctor, wanted to go so badly he asked young Italian "Maosists"—in vain—to help get him a visa.

Melotti, Musaccio and Miss Pisu were among 12 Italians who left Milan by plane Sunday for what is described here as the first group tourist trip to Communist China organized in the West.

The travelers will join two other Italians who had preceded them to Hong Kong.

The journey is the first of its kind since Italy and Communist China formally recognized each other last Nov. 8, opening a new era of trade and political contacts between the two countries.

The tour was arranged by the Italian tourist agency Navitù, with the collaboration of Switzerland's national airline, Swissair. The 24-day journey will take them to Canton, Shanghai, Nanking and Peking on tourist visas issued by the Chinese government.

The trip cost each traveler about 1.5 million lire or $2,400.

Officials say the 12 were among about 100 Italians who applied to visit China after diplomatic relations were established. Selection was said to have been on a first-come, first-served basis.

Dr. Musaccio, medical officer of a small town in Calabria, said he and his wife wanted to go to China "because for years we wanted to see this country that everyone talks about."

"I did everything I could to go. I even asked the 'Maosists' who came to Calabria for vacation to help me, but all I got were promises. I would have gone right to Mao in person if it was necessary."

Miss Pisu, daughter of Italian actor Mario Pisu, studied in Peking on a scholarship from 1957 to 1960. She said she wanted to see "some places dear to me, and to find out what happened after the cultural revolution."

Prince Flies Own Plane At Budapest

BUDAPEST, Hungary — Prince Philip piloted his own plane out of Budapest Sunday after a three-day visit which diplomats said may have broken the ice between the British royal family and the Soviet bloc.

Philip left in a Buckingham Palace Andover plane for Aberdeen, Scotland.

The husband of Britain's Queen Elizabeth II, was on a private visit to Hungary to attend a horse show. Nevertheless, he met government members for informal talks.

The British royal family has silently boycotted the Communist world since the communists took over in Russia and executed the last Czar. He was a close relative of the British royal family.

Although the Queen's sister, Princess Margaret, has visited Communist Yugoslavia and another royal family member, the Earl of Harwood, has visited Hungary, Philip and the Queen have not been to a Soviet bloc nation.

His visit, the diplomats said, might just have broken the ice in the relations between Buckingham Palace and the Soviet nations.

Spokesmen stressed Philip's visit had no political significance. He was here as president of the Equestrian Society. But diplomats said the fact he came at all was significant.

Philip was given V.I.P. treatment at all times by officials, including the Hungarian Foreign Ministry. Crowds at the horse show applauded the royal guest.

COMFORT TRICKS FOR FASHIONABLE DRESSING

Some women dress to attract a man. Others to impress other women. But no matter whom you aim to please, you've got to feel good in order to look good. How many times have you left a special purchase hanging in the closet because it was just plain uncomfortable?

Here are a few tricks to dressing with comfort in mind as well as fashion.

- A well-tailored pantsuit is a must in every wardrobe. Kasper for Joan Leslie likes the look and feel of the Acrilan acrylic city pants shown above. He creates an all-in-one pant-dress with the look of separates that does away with wasteful bulk. And adds a jacket for unexpected temperature changes. Smart and comfortable.
- Knits are known for comfort but inferior construction can result in unsightly bagging and shape loss. A quality guarantee, such as the Wear Dated tag promises a minimum of one year's normal wear or money back from Monsanto.
- Unlined clothes are lighter in weight and generally reasonably priced. If they itch or cling, try a slip of Ultron anti-static nylon that reduces cling and has a soft and unclimatic feeling as an underliner.
- Heavy back zippers, buttons, and bows can prove a painful annoyance when you're seated in a chair. Look behind you when you're standing in the fitting room.

Oil Company Taken to Court

RICHMOND, Calif. — The Standard Oil Company of California has been hauled into court by a probation officer on charges that the firm broke its probation by spilling oil in San Francisco Bay.

The action follows the latest spill of 15,000 to 30,000 gallons of crude oil in the bay that occurred Friday while the Swedish tanker, Jacob Malmar, was unloading at Standard's refinery on the Richmond Long Wharf.

Although cleanup operations were completed Sunday, Probation Officer Ben E. Fox said he was filing an action against the company in Richmond Municipal Court. The firm was ordered to appear Sept. 30.

"All I expect of Standard Oil is for them to meet their conditions of probation just like any other individual," Fox said.

The spill last Friday, Fox said, is the second major one this year and the company's 36th since 1967. The company beefed up its standby cleanup crews recently because of a huge spill last January when two big tankers collided in the fog near the Golden Gate Bridge.

The Coast Guard reported the most recent spill occurred when mooring lines from the tanker slackened and broke the unloading lines.

The Coast Guard said 50 men with six vacuum trucks and other equipment worked Saturday and Sunday on the cleanup.

The company was found guilty of two misdemeanors for oil spills on July 9 and July 28, 1970, after the firm's attorneys pleaded nolo contendere. The firm was fined $300 and $800, respectively, for the spills and put on one year's probation in November.

Fox said he would recommend operational and technical changes in the handling of oil when he takes the case to court. In addition, he said, will ask that probation be extended an additional year, and that the company pay a $1,000 fine.

Nixon To Meet Business Heads

WASHINGTON — President Nixon is to meet Monday with 11 business leaders as he continues his consultations on the course to take after the wage-price freeze ends.

He summoned his Cabinet, also along with members' wives, to an 8:30 a.m. EDT meeting to talk about the nation's economy.

The President occasionally includes wives in Cabinet meetings because he has said he wants to keep them informed of the problems that make their husbands work such long hours.

Nixon told a joint session of Congress last week that he will meet with representatives of labor, business, agriculture and economists to chart the course for the nation after Nov. 13 when the wage-price freeze ends.

Egyptians OK New Constitution

CAIRO — Egyptians approved a new permanent constitution Saturday by an overwhelming vote of 99.98 percent, the government announced at noon Sunday, 19 hours after the polls closed.

A nationwide referendum last week on whether to join with Syria and Libya in a federation achieved popular approval of 99.95 percent.

Under provisions of the newly approved constitution, the present cabinet is to submit its resignation, although it is understood the members will be asked to remain pending formation of a new cabinet.

The semi-official newspaper Al-Ahram said Sunday President Anwar Sadat is to address the nation sometime this week, outlining various reforms and a reorganization of his government.
