Invalid Dressing Made Easier by Few Changes

By JANICE R. CHRISTENSEN

Dressing an invalid or partial invalid can become relatively easy if you make a few simple adjustments in everyday clothing.

Mrs. Wiley Waters, a Pitt County homemaker, opened the back seams of her mother-in-law's dresses, gowns and slips and applied pressure tape to the opening.

"Aides at the nursing home say the newly-styled garments are easier to work with," notes Mrs. Evelyn Spangler, assistant home economics extension agent.

USE TRASH
No need to throw away trash. Recycle it into something useful, advises Mrs. Milton Ogburn, Smithfield, Rt. 1.

Instead of disposing of old newspapers, this Hope-well Extension Homemakers Club member uses strips of newspaper as a flower mulch.

She also cuts up old aluminum pie plates and makes flower labels that can be attached to plants with twisted wire bread wrapper closures, says Mrs. Patricia Brown, home

Chairman of SOBU, is a former Vice-President of the Student Government Association of A&T University. SOBU is composed of the student government associations of the Black colleges and universities and many of the Black student unions on predominantly White campuses. This organization recently led a march of over 5,000 students in Raleigh to protest the changes in the structure of higher education in North Carolina. Many Blacks believe these changes will destroy the Black colleges and universities.

Harvey White, President of the Student Government Association of North Carolina Central University, said that he hopes the conference will encourage college students to register during the Christmas break.

In addition to college students, John Edwards, Director of the North Carolina Voter Education Project, said that he expects from 200 to 300 high school students to attend the conference. Following the State Youth Conference, Edwards said that a series of county and Congressional District meetings will be held to deal with voter registration and participation. These meetings will be held before the May primary.
