

NCCU Law School Present Forum On PCR November 2nd

The North Carolina Central University Law School's Law Day Committee presented a forum on Police and Community Relations November 2 at 3:00 p.m. in the student union. The forum was the first in a series of presentations and discussions of vital issues affecting the Black community. Participating in the forum was Joseph Becton, director of the Human Relations Commission of Durham and his assistant director Bud Walker, Esai Berenbaum, director of Public Safety; Ben Ruffin, director of Operations of United Durham Incorporated; Lt. Ed Allen, director of the community Relations Department of the Durham Police Department; Kwame McDonald, Coordinator of Community Services of Shaw University; and W. W. Pleasants, Chief of Police of Durham. Paris Favors, Co-chairman of the Law Day Committee, explained that the idea for the forum grew out of the annual observance by law schools of Law Day as set up by Congress. On that day law schools across the nation present programs that deal with ways and means of improving society, strengthening the legal process and promoting the rights and responsibilities of citizens. "There are so many problems facing the Black community that we find it hard to try to accurately present and discuss these problems in one day." As a result North Carolina Central University Law School will present a forum each month for the duration of the school year on issues we feel are vital. Such issues are: Prison reform and the prisoner's rights; Labor rights of the domestic worker; Racial crisis in the high schools; and Tenant's rights.
