 WHERE ECONOMY ORIGINATES

There's a fabric today whose uses have reached out into everything from automobile interiors to tuxedos. It appears at the coldest winter resorts and the warmest beaches. And it's a fabric which has been so popular lately that this age has been dubbed "the blue denim society." Sturdy denim can turn a simple pair of blue jeans into a part of one's self-expression. In a time when people are searching out the real down to earth qualities in life, denim comes across as a part of the "real" in the world. Even on the ski slopes, denim is the choice of people who prefer a rugged pair of blue jeans, which can serve them both during and after the skiing hours, instead of a complicated wardrobe. Denim producers make such a vast amount of the fabric that they measure their output in miles instead of yards. But they can't make enough to keep up with the demand. The demand comes from those who create for the blue jean generation. It comes from home furnishing producers, who use denim in everything from draperies to slip covering. And it comes from the fashion people, high fashion designers who have made denim outfits and designers who turn denim into clothing ranging from bikinis to babies' diapers.

Woman's WORLD
NEW SPRAY CONTAINER DISPENSES HAND-CREAM
 Tired of hand-cream jars that are too deep for your fingers? According to a survey taken by Fuller Brush Company many women are. Getting the cream out of its container by hand can sometimes be difficult and messy. But Fuller with the help of Plant Industries, Inc., believes it has solved these problems.

Plant Industries developed the first non-aerosol dispensing container. It's called SELVAC, for self evacuating. And Fuller is the first to use it. Putting hand-cream in a SELVAC container provides convenience. Milady merely pushes on an actuator and out comes the cream. She rubs the cream onto her hands and it's done. No wiping excess cream off the jar. And the fat, round hand-cream jar sitting on the dressing table can be replaced by an aesthetic container. SELVAC fits any decorative shape and can be used with any material. If a paper jar was called for, SELVAC could work within it. SELVAC containers dispense products by a bladder system. The bladder resembles a balloon. It's this balloon that is filled with the product. Then, as the actuator is pressed the balloon contracts, forcing out the product. Obviously, only product is placed in the balloon. No propellant is needed. The absence of a propellant means SELVAC containers are safe. They can't explode. They have no irritating additives. They can be safely disposed of. And they dispense around 95 percent of the product. Another good feature. SELVAC isn't restricted to creams. Plant Industries says it will work on shampoos, lotions, toothpastes and many other household products.

$19 BILLION NET
 First estimates indicate that U. S. net farm income in 1972 was a near record $19 billion, up sharply from the $16.1 billion in 1971. Some of the reasons behind the rise were a heavy domestic demand for farm products, especially meat, and the gain in food and feed grain prices brought on by large export sales.
