 have spent about 16 weeks of on-the-job training in GM dealerships.
 Mr. Cannon is 39. He lives with his family at 1011 Jerome Road in Durham. He had three and one-half years at California State College.

Before being selected for the GM Dealer Development Academy, he was an effective salesman at Coggin Pontiac, Inc. in Durham. Earlier, he spent six years as accountant with IBM where, as a senior accounting analyst, he was involved with making projections, analyzing financial statements and other administrative duties.

Following a week of concentrated classroom work in Flint—this time on the parts department of a dealership—he returned in late December to Coggin Pontiac for thorough experience in every phase of the parts department including actual management training.

Groupings by size at conventions, seminars, and industrial expositions are also dictated by a city's population, and can often result in a larger city having certain advantages over smaller cities.

At the turn of the century, Durham's population was 6,679. The two largest growth periods in the city since that time were the first and third decades of this century. Between 1900 and 1910, the city's population grew at a rate of 173%, and between 1920 and 1930 the rate was 139.8%. The slowest period of growth, was between 1950 and 1960 when the rate was only 9.8%. The growth rate between 1960 and 1970 was 21.9%. Durham reached the 50,000 mark in population in approximately 1928, 75 years after the city was founded on April 26, 1953. The new population estimate means that, though it took 75 years for the first 50,000 growth, it only took 45 years for the second 50,000.

According to estimates by the Research Triangle Regional Planning Commission, Durham's population in 1980 will be approximately 130,000, and in 1990 will be 155,500.

dent government leaders from 14 Black colleges, plans were made to organize a coordinated student campaign, to call public attention to the need for restructuring the educational programs of Black colleges to make them more "relevant to the needs of Black people."

They also discussed means of assuring the survival of these institutions. Students are agitated over the fact that none of the Black state colleges has a majority of blacks on its board of trustees. For example, Southern University in Louisiana, scene of the student murders by law officers last November, does not have a single Black on its governing board.

Another source of contention is the merger of Black state colleges with larger white institutions causing the submergence of Black culture within the dominant white one. Examples of this trend are the merger of Maryland State College with the University of Maryland, and Prairie View with Texas A & M. Elsewhere, white schools are establishing competing branches next to existing Black colleges, such as the case of Auburn University in Montgomery, Alabama where Black Alabama State University has been functioning for over 100 years.

Also pointing to the need for the survival of Black institutions are the patterns of living that have emerged at the white institution which have a sizeable student population. Typically the Black students live, eat, study and socialize, with few exceptions, with each other only. Some colleges have taken official notice of this and unofficially reserved housing space for the exclusive use of Black students. (The Department of Health, Education and Welfare is said to be refraining to take action in such cases, as long as Black dormitory areas and clubs remain technically open to whites.)

the programs and the management of the programs. We cannot allow misconceived attitudes of anyone to cause a relaxation of the effort at this point in time.

I am sure that my mixed emotion about the President's proposed budget are shared by many Americans, especially Black Americans, and a large number of small and minority business entrepreneurs. Practically everyone whether poor White or Black is disturbed about the cuts in social programs particularly those that were designed to aid the poor and disadvantaged. On the other hand, however, the question must be answered as to what ordinary citizens can most afford - the increase in taxes, which are also paid by the poor, or a cut in the aid to programs designed to alleviate poverty which may or may not have worked.

There are some pluses and minuses in the proposed budget. The funds proposed for the department of OMBE can do the job if utilized efficiently. As an example, the current program of Business Resource Centers should be reviewed with a view toward eliminating duplication of effort.
