Law Students' Wives' Assoc. Tour UDI Supermarket

Members of the Law Students' Wives' Association of North Carolina Central University, as part of their expanded efforts toward community involvement toured the UDI Supermarket on Friday, March 9th.

Organized in 1968 at the incentive of the North Carolina Barristers' Wives' Association, the Law Students' Wives' Association is both civic and social in character. In addition to giving services to the NCCU law school and its students, the Association's civic activities include contributions of both time and money to needy community groups and families. Since the UDI Supermarket represents an effort to provide jobs and services to the Durham community and is the first of United Durham's ventures toward the establishment of black community owned and operated businesses, the members to the Law Students' Wives' Association, after initial discussion with UDI President Ed Stewart, decided to shop together at the market in order to promote and demonstrate their support of the supermarket.

Several of the Law Students' Wives' signalled their intentions of shopping at the UDI Supermarket on a regular basis both because of the benefits which the supermarket offers the Durham community as a whole and the quality of goods and services which the store provides to each of its customers individually.

World Day Of Prayer Largely Attended By All Groups

The World Day of Prayer observance in Durham was largely attended by Churchwomen of all denominations along with churchmen and some ministers at the United Church of Christ on Friday, March 2, at 10:30 a.m. Dr. William O. Smith is the minister. On Friday night, the observance was continued at 7:45 p.m. at the Lincoln Memorial Baptist Church of which the Reverend N. P. Brodie is minister.

This day was observed by churchwomen in 168 countries around the world in 87 languages. The theme for the day was, "Alert in Our Time." Dr. Frances Dawson, the guest speaker at the morning service, challenged the audience on how to be alert in this period of change by taking advantage of opportunities for personal fulfillment, and through enlightened and Christian leadership as builders of people for useful lives. She also stressed the need for a change of attitudes for action in this period of change. "Keep learning," she said, "for the moment one stops learning is the moment he stops growing."

At the evening service, Mrs. Johnnie McLester was the featured speaker. She stressed the need for activities to produce change in the social order, social reaction, the re-discovery of self, personal resources, faith as a reservoir of power, fellowship as the collective divine life, and involvement. She also challenged the audience to know about the whole, and the need for leaders to study, to be informed, and to be alert in this time. Continuing, she pointed out the need for a one-to-one relationship for communication, outreach, and evaluation because of the existence of different life-styles. Young people must be involved in the organized Church.
