In the Driver's Seat
Never Stop On a Freeway
The driver who stops his car on the travelled portion of a freeway is absolutely wrong—and he could be dead wrong. Traffic safety experts regard stopping on a high-speed road so dangerous that they urge motorists to go to extreme lengths to avoid it. If a tire should blow out, it is still necessary to get off the road by pulling off the driving lanes. It may take a driver a thousand feet to work his way through traffic. The first collision with a car and get on the shoulder, but it must be done. The motorist who stops on a freeway endangers himself, his passengers, the occupants of following cars—and risks a lawsuit if his action forces other drivers into accidents. There have been far too many cases in which a stopped car has been struck violently from the rear by a following car whose driver was unable to stop in time or to steer into another lane in congested traffic. The first collision has often caused several other following cars to collide with disastrous results. The rule applies to urban and intercity freeways. Keep moving, but if you must stop, get off on the shoulder.

NASTURTIUMS—GOOD ENOUGH TO EAT

Every portion of a Nasturtium is good to eat—the flowers, the stems and the leaves are great in salads, while the seeds are delicious pickled. For a really delicious taste, snap off the spur of a nasturtium flower and eat it. The combination of sweet nectar and mildly pungent flavor of the plant mingle to produce a delicious taste. Actually, the entire nasturtium plant, including stems, leaves, flowers and seeds are great to eat. The spicy leaves are good in sandwiches and salads, imparting a flavor similar to garden cress. The seeds make a good winter snack. They grow large as peas and are easy to handle. Just clean and bottle them with freshly boiled vinegar. Then seal and store for winter. Of course, nasturtiums are beautiful in the flower garden. Choose dwarf varieties for low beds and borders, and tall types to climb up trellis and netting. Flowers are mostly yellow, orange and red, long stemmed, excellent for dainty flower arrangements. Cultivate soil well before planting seed in spring after danger of frost. When planted in shade or a soil that's too rich and moist, they have a tendency to produce more leaves than flowers. Children love to plant nasturtium seeds because the seeds are very easy to handle, and the resulting plants have other attractions. For instance, hummingbirds love nasturtium nectar, and if you have never seen a hummingbird in your garden a bed of nasturtiums might well attract them. Two popular varieties of nasturtiums are the Gleam and Jewel series. Flowers of Gleam are extra-large and sweet-scented, growing 3 ft. tall with stems long enough to make beautiful flower arrangements. The Jewel series are low-growing—just 1 ft. high, each plant creating a neat dome of flowers and foliage.

Green Thumb Tips

Moonglow is a quick-growing climber, producing massive 6 inch flowers which open at night with such speed that you can actually observe the petals move. In mild areas it can be grown as a perennial, but is best treated as an annual grown fresh from seed each year. If you want to grow those gigantic sunflowers—the kind people win contests with—the variety to look for in the seed displays and catalogs is Sunflower, Mammoth. The black-and-white striped seeds should be planted directly into the garden after danger of frost in a sunny location and fertile soil. The huge yellow flowers appear on 6 ft. stalks, and the centers swell out as the seeds develop. Birds are especially fond of sunflower seeds, and so are children, since the meaty kernels have a nutty flavor. Strawflowers are a recent addition to the flower garden. Discovered growing wild in the meadows of Western Australia, they are easy-to-grow. In addition to creating a magnificent garden display during summer, they can be dried to last all winter in dried flower arrangements. Colors include crimson, yellow, orange, pink and white.
