FROM BLACK

by John Hudgins

The Sunday feature in the other paper was most interesting to this writer. Perhaps I thought the day was over when a bunch of so-called Black leaders would sit down with a naive white writer and waste time explaining what it is that they want to be called. I mean this was the thing to do in the sixties, but by now, if some white boy has to ask you what you want to be called and you tell him then you haven't been doing your homework. What you are in the life you live, not in how you describe it. White folks know what you are and they know what to call you when you ain't around, so why discuss it.

It is even more strange why some of us go so far as to explain how the word Black is not so bad as long as it is a state of mind. I mean let's be serious, Black is still a color, and always will be. No matter what you call yourself it all means ain't white.

The state of mind that goes with being Black came out of an experience. That experience was predicated upon skin color, so there is no point in getting off on a trip, you still Black, your mind, your body, some of your parents, your name, and certainly your status in this society. It does not make sense to evade the issue. Few months back some students were going around comparing which one is Blackest, and the lightest "get back." The precise reversal of what was happening a few years ago, and even now in certain parts of town. This is ridiculous.

There is no doubt in my mind that we are all in the same bag, whether we like it or not. You see the basic premise of Sunday's article was that the speakers had a choice in what they wanted to be called. The white boy did not explain to them that the choice was semantic and/or academic. Not only that but to demonstrate how stupid the game was, ask the simple question: Was there any doubt as to what the writer was to be called? Is it a question of the color of his mind? A question about how old he is (Yes, some of us think our name changes with our age.)

I think it is about time the so-called Black-Negro Colored leaders discuss the real issues. I have a few for a start. (1) Why wasn't there a non-white writer doing the story, (2) Why was this feature story on the back page with the cartoon? (3) Why weren't these people story on the big corruption in D.C. (Hitler Nixon) (4) Or why weren't they asked about they shaky dealing in city hall (Yes, in Durham)? Why is it in a time like this our so-called leaders can fall victims to such a cruel joke played by a naive reporter/writer wanting to fill some space and give unequal time.

The storm is yet to come, but I have a very bad feeling that we better check out the folks playing around the captains chair.

The sports complex for Puerto Rican youths that was Roberto Clemente's dream is fast becoming a reality as fundraising projects are meeting with great success. The latest activity in memory of the baseball great that died recently in a plane crash is the minting of a $10 commemorative silver coin which has raised $105,000 already and has promoted plans for a gold version that will sell for $100 each.
