Black Sorority is Organized at University of North Carolina

CHAPEL HILL - The first black sorority at the University of North Carolina here was officially organized this week.

Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc. is a national public service sorority dedicated to social welfare, academic excellence and cultural enrichment.

The sorority was created to encourage more sisterhood between black women on a predominantly white university campus, explained the members.

"The sorority is just what we need to help retain and strengthen our black identity here at UNC," commented Belinda Williams. "By being able to work together toward one goal we can communicate better with each other."

Two UNC students, Mary Thomas of Durham and Meta Weaver of Chapel Hill, sorority members from another campus, initiated plans for the new chapter in March. The charter organization on the campus here, known as Kappa Omicron, will serve as the sister sorority to the recently organized chapter of Omega Psi Phi Fraternity.

Organized in 1913 at Howard University in Washington, Delta Sigma Theta has over 60,000 members in 408 chapters throughout the world. Prominent members include Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm; Patricia P. Harris, first black woman ambassador; and Lillian P. Benbow, assistant director for housing programs, Michigan State Civil Rights Commission.
