out in this bond issue. The most critical needs for streets, water and sewer should outweigh some outmoded statue."

4. "The candidacy is further dedicated to bringing together our diverse groups and interests within our city. Hence, healing the wounds of the division. The opportunities are too great for us to continue as town against town; youth against age; group against group; and geographical section against geographical section. A quality of leadership in the MAYOR'S office is needed that can involve and channel these divisions in areas of endeavor beyond themselves. We are one people, with one set of natural resources and one high calling."

5. "A critical leadership is needed to help bring about multiple-city government. Durham, Raleigh, Chapel Hill and surrounding areas are moving closer together. The MAYOR has to be a person who perceives and relates adequately to the diverse groups and interest within these cities. We are no longer dealing with just one group of persons or one set of interests.

6. "Durham is sitting on a powder keg. Now is the time to build the bridges, set the example and elect people on the basis of merit. The city administration must dedicate itself to the extra steps of helping the disadvantaged and oppressed persons equip themselves to cope with 'making it' in our society."

The fact that the Charter Commission, to merge the county and city governments, has not finished its work, illustrates our lack of top leadership—that is, the ability and willingness to get diverse groups and interests working and deciding among themselves. People's interest got a hearing on the commission and profit interest balked. Our churches have been the centers and promoters of this humanitarian vision. Church leaders have been in the forefront of civil rights legislation, desegregation of our society and we've done it largely without the support of the profit making interest. Now is the time for that leadership to get in position to do more in the line of justice for all the people.

The Candidate is a native of Oak City. He is the fourth generation of Ministers in his family.

MASSACHUSETTS EXEMPTED FROM COMPUTER

BOSTON — (NBNS)— Massachusetts will receive $9 million in federal funds to conduct drug treatment programs after a dispute with the federal government over whether or not information which would identify those receiving treatment had to be submitted to the U.S.

State and local officials said they would reject the funds rather than supply Client-Oriented Data Acquisition Process forms they said would violate the constitutional rights of individuals.
